Dear [redacted]

Many thanks. No I was not registered but am now.

I hadn't seen the otter survey but the clay ground, red kite and sparrow hawk material was familiar.

Thanks again and best wishes

I just wanted to make sure you are aware of this publication. I've not yet had chance to read it, but it highlights that this debate is continuing to be held in the wider public sphere outside of the work of the LAG.

Best wishes

This e mail is to let you know that the latest WILDCOMS newsletter is now available.

The Winter 2014 newsletter (Issue 9) focuses on investigations into the effects of Lead (Pb) and lead shot on UK wildlife and features articles from Cardiff University Otter project, Animal Health and Veterinary Laboratories Agency (AHVLA) and thePredatory Bird Monitoring Scheme (PBMS) as well as news items and recent publications from WILDCOMS schemes.

Please navigate to our website (www.wildcoms.org.uk) or open the newsletter directly. If you prefer to download newletters as pdfs, click on the pdf link and follow the instructions.

Please forward to colleagues who may be interested in the information WILDCOMS provides.

New to WILDCOMS? – here is more information on what it is

The WILDCOMS (Wildlife Disease & Contaminant Monitoring and Surveillance) network is a NERC-funded Knowledge Exchange network formed between the various UK surveillance schemes that monitor disease and contaminants in vertebrate wildlife

WILDCOMS aims to

- provide a focal point for disease and contaminant monitoring in wild vertebrates
- provide key stakeholders (such as policy makers, regulators, NGOs and industry) with an integrated overview of the health status of UK wild vertebrates
- facilitate collaboration between WILDCOMS network partners
- facilitate identification of disease and contaminants of emerging concern

The WILDCOMS website and its news items can be viewed at www.wildcoms.org.uk. If you forget the link, just Google search on WILDCOMS.
