Dear Sir or Madam,
Regardless of the possible benefits of increased trading being considered good for the economy, the over-riding issue is of security and safety for householders.
Callers at the door are a strong source of houses and neighbourhoods being reconnoitred as targets for criminal activity. Moreover, such callers are at best intrusive to privacy and at worst alarming.

Please ensure that whatever legislation is enacted, it puts the security and safety of householders first through reducing - no increasing - the number of callers at doors.
Yours sincerely,
Charles Pratley
