Dear Rory Stewart

Though unfortunately it is technically impossible at the moment to find a way to deal with paper cups, I totally agree that something must be done and believe that pressure should be applied to find a way to deal with them. I live in [REDACTED] and the bloomin' things crop up on beaches and roadsides and, along with plastic water bottles, form a large proportion of the litter defacing the environment.

If not a tax on consumers, how about a levy on the coffee chains to cover recycling costs; or on the cup manufacturers to encourage them to change the composition of the cups to make them recyclable? Or conversely, some reward to the coffee chains for collecting and recycling their cups?

Keep on with the fight!

Yours sincerely
