I am an independent consultant working with companies around the world to build performant and standards-compliant websites.

I find Apple's ban on other rendering engines on mobile devices to significantly hold back innovation and competition in the web space. It prevents user choice, obviously, and this has a significant negative impact on the upstream development of apps and experiences for users. I would welcome any intervention here to prevent these monopolistic practices.

A separate issue, but Apple also significantly negatively impact the experience of Progressive Web Apps (PWAs) on phones, which forces developers to build native apps for their app store, and pay 30% of revenue to Apple directly. I find this reprehensible behaviour.
