SETTING THE SCENE

“Deaths and injuries from fire will rise in proportion to the increases in numbers of older people. Almost twice as many people over the age of 50 now die in dwelling fires in the UK each year compared to those under 50.”

“The fire services do what every stakeholder involved in reducing health inequalities should do: engage directly with the community, work to provide them with the opportunities they need to live a healthy life and focus on prevention.”

Between 2004 and 2008, DCLG invested £25m in grants to fund home fire check activity. This was responsible for 57% of the fall in accidental dwelling fire deaths, 13,670 fewer fires and 888 fewer non-fatal casualties saving between £926m to £1,943m to the economy.

Reforms to the fire and rescue service in many ways provide a model for reform of wider criminal justice services. They have moved from a reactive to preventative model of delivery.
