Introduction

Useful sources is a collection of non-country specific source websites compiled to assist UK Border Agency officials involved in the asylum and human rights decision making process. The list is not exhaustive but provides a selection of useful sources that cover a range of themes and countries, complementing Country of Origin Information (COI) Service's existing range of products and information request service. Weblinks to the sources were accurate as of 13 July 2011. Useful sources was issued on 14 July 2011.

COI Service would welcome any comments regarding this document or suggestions for additional source material. Please submit these to the address/email below:

Note on usage

Some of the sources provide information that covers a range of human rights issues, and could be listed under several thematic headings. For example, the US State Department annual country human rights reports cover matters relating to ethnic and religious groups, women and children, political opposition and freedom of press, in a number of countries. Other sources such as Human Rights Watch and Amnesty International also provide annual human rights reports on countries but additionally publish documents that cover a variety of specific thematic issues. To avoid repetition, sources which cover countries' general human rights situations in a single document or provide multiple reports on a variety of specific issues are, for the most part, listed once under the heading, Human rights – general.

Additionally, there are a number of websites which are country of origin information (COI) databases, collating COI published by a variety of sources onto a single website. The two main databases are the UNHCR's Refworld and the Austrian Centre for Country of Origin and Asylum Research and Documentation's European Country of Origin Information network (ecoi.net). These two websites are listed under the heading, General reference and COI databases.

The sources that provide general human rights information and/or report on a variety of issues, and the COI databases, are useful starting points in searching for general or specific COI on human rights matters in countries of interest.
