

Dear Sirs,

I understand that the case for a nuclear repository in Cumbria has been re-opened. Considering the County Council's decision to reject this earlier in the year, this comes as a surprise.

I was unaware that the "consultation" had been reopened and I'm shocked that somehow the powers that be wish to over-rule the general opinion of the county. I am not against nuclear processing in Cumbria, indeed Sellafield is an important part of West Cumbria. However, I am very concerned by the methodology being used to force this case through; when there has been clear objection on numerous levels. It appears to be a case of changing the goalposts.

This has to be a matter of safety first and the right of withdrawal for the county should remain in place throughout.

Regards,

Jamie Chaplin-Brice
