- been imposed by a Border Force officer
- receiving their biometric residence permit

For information on where a person must register with the police, see related link: Where to register with the police.

Once registered, the police will give the applicant a police registration certificate (PRC) which shows they have complied with the requirement to register.

The applicant must inform the police of any changes to the information they have provided whilst they are still in the UK and subject to the requirement to register with the police.

See related links for guidance on:

- exemption from registration
- dependants
- dual nationals and other travel documents

Imposing the requirement in other cases

If you believe it is necessary you can impose a condition to register with the police, to make sure the person complies with the terms of their leave to enter. The person must be a foreign national aged 16 years or over (paragraph 326(3) of the rules).

You must be satisfied the requirement to register with the police was imposed in error at the time it was imposed. For example the following would not have had the original requirement imposed in error:

- an applicant who becomes exempt later by obtaining a different category of leave
- by obtaining dual nationality

Removing the requirement - person has not yet registered

If the applicant has not yet registered, you must:

- delete the registration endorsement in the person's passport
- return the passport to them, enclosing ICD.1100 to explain the endorsement was imposed in error
- amend CID, if appropriate to make sure the police are notified of the error

Removing the requirement - person has registered

If the applicant has registered, you must:

- obtain the police registration certificate and endorse the back page with 'exempt from registration'
- return the certificate and passport to the person, with an ICD.1100 to explain the original endorsement was imposed in error
- write to the Overseas Visitor Records Office (OVRO), if the person lives in the London Metropolitan Police District; or the Chief Constable of the relevant police force if they live outside of Greater London, to explain the requirement was imposed in error and request they consider refunding the fee
- amend CID to reflect the correct status

You must consider the requirement to have been imposed in error if a dual national had another nationality not listed in Appendix 2 when they were admitted to the UK. For more information on which nationalities need to register with the police, see the related link: Immigration Rules Appendix 2.
