What are regulated activity providers?

A regulated activity provider is an organisation or individual responsible for the management or control of regulated activity (paid or unpaid) and makes arrangements for people to work in that activity. This will usually be an employer or a voluntary organisation.

Examples of a regulated activity provider would include, but not be limited to:

- an NHS hospital or health and social care trust that employ people to provide care, supervision and advice to children and vulnerable adults
- a school that provides education to children under 18 years of age

A regulated activity provider can also be a person who manages volunteers in a regulated activity position, such as a scout leader or as part of a charitable organisation.
