

I attended the recent event in Plymouth and despite the quality of argument presented, I still feel very unhappy about the notion of a plan which claims to be able to secure safe storage for hundreds of thousands of years hence. We might be able to predict geological and other physical conditions. What is far less certain is human nature. Can we really trust future humans to be responsible and sensible?

The material should be stored safely until technology exists to render it harmless. No more nuclear waste should be generated until we have the technology to render it harmless.

Thank you and yours sincerely,
Janet Vosper.
