It has been brought to my attention that the government is intending to backtrack on the repeal of Section 52.

As an interiors photographer whose livelihood is photographing owner's homes for the interior magazines, this would effectively bring my work to a halt. The idea of policing the hundreds of items in an owner's home to make sure there is no copyright infringement would be totally unworkable.

Under these proposals I would have to check every item from a chair to a clock to a teapot, and rely on answers from owners that may, or may not be accurate.

Having worked as a photographer for almost 40yrs, this is possibly the most ludicrous copyright law I have ever come across, could not common sense prevail here ?

Yours Faithfully

Colin Poole
