I am writing to express my concern and disapproval of the law changes. I feel it could add a massive strain on the economy, by reducing free advertising (some companies encourage social media advertising), restricting self-employed photographers (for example, designed cars, cakes, dresses and more), increasing red tape and over-stretching an already stretched legal system.

I also feel it imposes unnecessary restrictions on people's freedom, by taking away rights in order to fix a problem that never existed.

I worry it would result in people being unable to take a photo that shows the clothes they have on, the jewelry they have on, a bottle of wine at a meal, a can of lager at a party, a shop in the background, the sofa on which a family is sitting, the toy with which a child is playing, an advert on a passing bus in the background, presents received and much much more. It has the potential to be hugely intrusive and restricting on everyday life.

I am also concerned it could be used to restrict photographs being taken of a police officer (because of their uniform) or a politician (wearing a designer suit). There is far too much room for abuse of the law. I support leaving the law as it is now.

Thank you,
