Thank you for your email of 31 March 2016 asking for information under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA) 2000. You asked:

My topic is the recognition of Kosovo and, in particular, the question of why states decide to recognize Kosovo or not. My research question is: why did similar countries like the United Kingdom and Spain come to a different decision regarding the recognition of Kosovo in 2008?

I am particularly interested in documents and statements regarding the British decision on the recognition of Kosovo in 2008. The actual decision was made on the 18th of February 2008. I was wondering if you could help me with accessing or receiving official data that explain and mention the British position regarding the independence of Kosovo?

Furthermore, I would like to ask if you have any other tips and interesting data that you would like to share in order to help me with comparing the position of the United Kingdom and Spain towards the independence and recognition of Kosovo?

I am writing to confirm that we have now completed the search for the information which you requested.

I can confirm that the Foreign and Commonwealth Office (FCO) does hold information relevant to your request.

Please find attached the information that the FCO can release to you. Some of the information has been withheld using section 27 – international relations. Section 27 is a qualified exemption and is subject to a public interest test.

Some of the information within the scope of your request is exempt under Section 27(1) of the Act as it relates to Government to Government discussion with other States and international organisations (in this instance, with the US, Serbia, the EU and its Member States, and Russia). Releasing information shared with the UK could undermine the UK’s and the EU’s role in the recognition of Kosovo’s independence – one of the UK’s top foreign policy objectives in the Western Balkans. If we want to continue to play an influencing role, then our bilateral relationships with other partners need protecting. The effective conduct of international relations depends upon maintaining trust and confidence between Governments. This relationship of trust allows for the free and frank exchange of information on the understanding that it will be treated in confidence. If the United Kingdom does not respect such confidences, its ability to protect and promote UK interests through international relations will be hampered. The States concerned may be reluctant to share sensitive information with the UK Government in future and may be less likely to respect the confidentiality of information supplied by the UK Government to them, to the detriment of UK interests. We recognise that there is public interest in this particular subject, and that there continues to be debate concerning the recognition of Kosovo’s independence. But, for all the reasons mentioned above, we consider that in all the circumstances of the case, the public interest in maintaining this exemption outweighs the public interest in disclosure.

Once an FOI request is answered, it is considered to be in the public domain. To promote transparency, we may now publish the response and any material released on gov.uk in the FOI releases section. All personal information in the letter will be removed before publishing.

The copies of information being supplied to you continue to be protected by the Copyright, Designs and Patents Act 1988. You are free to use it for your own purposes, including any non-commercial research you are doing and for the purposes of news reporting. Any other re-use, for example commercial publication, would require the permission of the copyright holder. Most documents supplied by the FCO will have been produced by government officials and will be protected by Crown Copyright. To re-use Crown Copyright documents please consult the Open Government Licence v3 on the National Archives website.

Information you receive which is not subject to Crown Copyright continues to be protected by the copyright of the person, or organisation, from which the information originated. You must ensure that you gain their permission before reproducing any third party (non-Crown Copyright) information.

Yours sincerely,

Western Balkans and Enlargement Department

We keep and use information in line with the Data Protection Act 1998. We may release this personal information to other UK government departments and public authorities.