A message from Dr Chris Gibson, Chair of COMARE

Dear Candidate,

Thank you for your interest in this post and for your time reading this candidate information pack.

The Committee on Medical Aspects of Radiation in the Environment (COMARE) is a scientific advisory committee providing independent expert advice on all aspects of health risks to people exposed to natural and man-made radiation. Members are chosen for their medical and scientific expertise and recruited from Universities, and Research and Medical Institutes. Members have never been drawn directly from commercial or industrial sectors where conflicts of interest may arise.

COMARE offers independent advice to all Government Departments and Devolved Authorities, not just the Health Departments, and is responsible for assessing and advising them on the health effects of both ionising and non-ionising radiation. It is also asked to assess the adequacy of the available data and recommend the need for further research as required.

As a member of COMARE you will contribute to discussions of the committee, working alongside other recognised experts assessing the detailed technical data under consideration. You will need to be at least nationally or ideally internationally recognised as an expert in the area outlined in the personal specification. You will be expected to assist the committee in helping to draft advice appropriate for wider dissemination to the general public.

The work of the committee requires a high commitment to Public Health issues and Public Service values.

The committee has a diverse work programme and you may be asked to serve on specialist subcommittees and working groups to address specific issues.

I do hope you are excited by the challenges this opportunity presents and that you will be inspired to apply.

Dr Chris Gibson

Chair of COMARE

1.2 COMARE role and responsibilities

COMARE is an expert committee of the Department of Health and Social Care. Its role is to assess and advise government and the devolved administrations on the health effects of natural and man-made radiation, and to assess the adequacy of the available data and the need for further research.

The Committee is comprised of a chair and members appointed as independent scientific and medical experts based on their special skills and knowledge. Lay members also sit on the committee to help ensure that COMARE’s advice is appropriate for wider dissemination to the general public. There are specialist working groups that report to COMARE, for example to consider updates on monitoring programmes near nuclear installations.

COMARE has produced 17 reports to date in response to requests for advice from government departments. The Committee has been active in assessing the possible association between radioactive discharges and childhood cancer and has produced a number of reports on issues with nuclear sites. The Committee has advised the Government on the possible health effects from exposure to UV radiation in artificial tanning devices and radiation dose issues from CT scans. COMARE is currently reviewing radiation dose issues associated with interventional radiology and DXA scans for sports performance assessments.

Members of COMARE are supported in their work by a Secretariat, which is provided by Public Health England (PHE). PHE has expertise that enables the Secretariat to provide members with comprehensive background information and briefing papers which inform the decision-making processes of the committee.

The Committee holds three meetings a year (March, July and November), usually using Department of Health and Social Care facilities in London and attended by representatives from a range of government departments and agencies. The minutes of the meetings are published on the COMARE gov.uk webpage.

Further background information on COMARE and previous committee reports can be found on the COMARE gov.uk webpage:
