About this guidance

This guidance tells you how to consider settlement and leave to remain (LTR) applications from people applying on the basis of long residence in the UK.

This guidance is based on the Immigration Rules.

The rules on long residence recognise the ties a person may form with the UK over a lengthy period of residence here.

Settlement can be granted under paragraphs 276A-276D of the Immigration Rules after a period of 10 years continuous lawful residence.

Before 9 July 2012 it was possible to grant long residence after a period of 14 years continuous residence, but that provision was removed by changes to the Immigration Rules on that date.

However, a person granted an extension of stay following an application made before 9 July 2012 can still be considered under the rules in force before that date. This means a person granted leave to remain on the basis of 14 years residence in the UK can still be granted ILR once the requirements are met.

If a person was continuously resident in the UK on or before 1 January 1973, they should not apply for long residence. For guidance, see: Windrush scheme casework guidance

Extension requirements

This page tells you about the extension requirements for the long residence category.

Before considering an application you must check:

- the application is valid
- the applicant's passport or travel document is genuine
- there are no general grounds for refusal

For more information, see:

- Specified application forms and procedures
- General grounds for refusal

There is no provision in the long residence rules to grant indefinite leave to enter.

Applicants in the UK with temporary admission

If an applicant with temporary admission meets all the other requirements of rule 276B, discretion can be exercised by Border Force to grant them 6 months' code 1 outside the Immigration Rules, so they can make an application in the UK.

Limited leave

Before 2 April 2007 it was not possible to grant limited leave to remain on the basis of long residence. On 2 April 2007, paragraph 276A1 and paragraph 276A2 were added to the Immigration Rules.

This allows long residence applicants to be granted limited leave to remain, if:

- they have had at least 10 years continuous lawful residence in the UK
- there are no reasons why it would be undesirable for them to be given leave to remain, see: 10 years continuous lawful residence
- the applicant must not be in breach of immigration laws, except:
 - for any period of overstaying for 28 days or less which will be disregarded where the period of overstaying ended before 24 November 2016
 - where overstaying on or after 24 November 2016, leave was nevertheless granted in accordance with paragraph 39E of the Immigration Rules

Limited leave to remain is granted under paragraph 276A2 of the long residence category of the Immigration Rules, and not as an extension of their previous category of limited leave to remain. This means an applicant must meet the rules for long residence, and not the rules for their previous category.

You must only grant an extension of further leave on the basis of long residence if the applicant meets all the criteria in paragraph 276B (i), (ii) and (v). You must not grant an applicant an extension in order to complete the qualifying period of 10 years for long residence, if they have not spent enough time in the UK to be granted indefinite leave. For more information, see early applications.

Indefinite leave requirements

This page tells you about the requirements applicants must meet to qualify for indefinite leave to remain on the basis of long residence after 10 years continuous lawful residence in the UK.

Before considering an application you must check:

- the application is valid
- the applicant's passport or travel document is genuine
- there are no general grounds for refusal

For more information, see:

- Specified application forms and procedures
- General grounds for refusal

Requirements for long residence

The applicant must meet the following requirements to be granted indefinite leave:

- the applicant must have at least 10 years continuous lawful residence in the UK
- there must be no reason why granting leave is against the public good
- the applicant must meet the knowledge of language and life requirement
- the applicant must not fall for refusal under the general grounds for refusal
- the applicant must not be in breach of immigration laws, except
 - for any period of overstaying for 28 days or less which will be disregarded where the period of overstaying ended before 24 November 2016
 - where overstaying on or after 24 November 2016, leave was never the less granted in accordance with paragraph 39E of the immigration rules – for more information on overstaying, see applications from overstayers (non family routes)

For more information on these requirements, see: 10 years continuous lawful residence.

10 years' continuous lawful residence

This page tells you how to decide whether an applicant has been continually lawfully resident in the UK when considering long residence applications.

Once an applicant has built up a period of 10 years' continuous lawful residence, there is no limit on the length of time afterwards when they can apply. This means they could leave the UK, re-enter on any lawful basis, and apply for settlement from within the UK based on a 10 year period of continuous lawful residence they built up in the past. There is also nothing to prevent a person relying on a 10 year period that they may have relied on in a previous application or grant.

Time the applicant has spent in the UK with 3C leave also counts towards lawful residence. You can find more information on time awaiting a decision on an application or an appeal.

Definition of continuous lawful residence

Lawful residence is defined in paragraph 276A of the Immigration Rules as a period of continuous residence in which the applicant had one of the following:

- existing leave to enter or remain
- temporary admission within section 11 of the 1971 Immigration Act where leave to enter or remain is subsequently granted
- an exemption from immigration control, including where an exemption ceases to apply if it is immediately followed by a grant of leave to enter or remain

Residence in the UK

The UK consists of Great Britain and Northern Ireland. Time spent in the Republic of Ireland, Channel Islands or the Isle of Man does not count as residence in the UK for the purposes of long residence even though they form part of the common travel area.

Breaks in continuous residence

This page tells you when continuous residence is considered to have been broken for the purpose of long residence applications.

For the purpose of calculating time spent outside the UK for the long residence rules, a month constitutes 30 calendar days.

Events that break continuous residence

Continuous residence is considered to be broken if the applicant has:

- been absent from the UK for a period of more than 6 months at any one time
- spent a total of 18 months outside the UK throughout the whole 10 year period
- left the UK before 24 November 2016 with no valid leave to remain on their departure from the UK, and failed to apply for entry clearance within 28 days of their previous leave expiring (even if they returned to the UK within 6 months)

Time spent outside the UK

Continuous residence is not considered broken if the applicant:

- is absent from the UK for 6 months or less at any one time
- had existing leave to enter or remain when they left and when they returned – this can include leave gained at port when returning to the UK as a non-visa national
- departed the UK before 24 November 2016, but after the expiry of their leave to remain, and applied for fresh entry clearance within 28 days of that previous leave expiring, and returned to the UK within 6 months

If the applicant had existing leave to enter or remain when they left and returned to the UK, the existing leave does not have to be in the same category on departure and return. For example, an applicant can leave the UK as a Tier 4 (General) student and return with leave as a spouse of a settled person. Continuous residence is not broken as the applicant had valid leave both when they left and returned to the UK.

If an applicant was in the UK with a right to reside under European Economic Area (EEA) regulations, continuous residence is not broken if they leave the UK and are then re-admitted under the EEA regulations.

If the applicant has been absent from the UK for more than 6 months in one period or more than 18 months in total, the application should normally be refused. However, it may be appropriate to exercise discretion over excess absences in compelling or compassionate circumstances, for example where the applicant was prevented from returning to the UK through unavoidable circumstances.

This must be decided at senior executive officer (SEO) level with a grant of leave outside the Immigration Rules being the appropriate outcome.

Things to consider when assessing if the absence was compelling or compassionate are:

- for all cases – you must consider whether the individual returned to the UK within a reasonable time once they were able to do so
- for the single absence of over 180 days:
 - you must consider how much of the absence was due to compelling circumstances and whether the applicant returned to the UK as soon as they were able to do so
 - you must also consider the reasons for the absence
- for overall absences of 540 days in the 10 year period:
 - you must consider whether the long absence (or absences) that pushed the applicant over the limit happened towards the start or end of the 10 year residence period, and how soon they will be able to meet that requirement
 - if the absences were towards the start of that period, the person may be able to meet the requirements in the near future, and so could be expected to apply when they meet the requirements
 - however, if the absences were recent, the person will not qualify for a long time, and so you must consider whether there are particularly compelling circumstances

All of these factors must be considered together when determining whether it is reasonable to exercise discretion.

Time spent in prison

Continuous residence is broken if an applicant receives a custodial sentence by a court of law and is sent to:

- prison
- a young offender institution
- a secure hospital

Any time the applicant spends in one of the above establishments does not count as continuous leave for the purposes of meeting 276A and 276D of the Immigration Rules. Any leave accumulated before sentencing will be disregarded and only residence after release from custody will be counted as continuous residence.

Continuous residence is not broken if an applicant receives a suspended sentence from a court of law. It is also important to note that time spent on remand awaiting trial does not break continuous residence.

Calculating absence from the UK

You must check carefully:

- information on the application form
- any UK exit and entry stamps in the passports

- the landing cards section on warehouse to confirm when the applicant entered the UK

You must be satisfied there is enough evidence to show the applicant has been in the UK continuously for 10 years required under the rules.

Early applications

This page tells you what you must do if you receive an application for indefinite leave on the basis of long residence before an applicant has completed their period of 10 years qualifying leave.

You must consider all valid applications, even if the applicant has not yet completed the necessary qualifying period for indefinite leave. The long residence rule requires applicants to have at least 10 years continuous residence in the UK before they can qualify for indefinite leave.

Applications being considered more than 28 days before the required qualifying period is completed

If you are considering an application more than 28 days before the applicant completes the required qualifying period for long residence you must refuse. This is because the applicant has not completed the required period of leave in the UK.

You must fully consider the case and mention any other reasons for refusal in addition to the applicant not spending enough time in the UK to complete the qualifying period. For example, all breaks in continuous residence.

Applicants who are refused under the long residence rules due to them submitting their application too early can re-apply once they have completed their qualifying leave or up to 28 days before this.

Applications being considered 28 days or less before the required qualifying period is completed

You can grant an application if it is considered 28 days or less before the applicant completes the required qualifying period, provided they meet all the other rules for long residence.

Examples of continuous residence

This page gives you examples of when you must grant or refuse a long residence application when considering the continuous residence requirement.

Example 1

An applicant:

- enters the UK on 1 September 2004 with entry clearance as a student which is valid until 31 October 2005
- leaves the UK on 5 November 2005, after their previous leave expired
- applies for entry clearance on 22 December 2005
- re-enters the UK with valid entry clearance as a student on 5 January 2006

The applicant did not have valid leave on the date of their departure, and failed to apply for fresh entry clearance within 28 days of the original leave expiring. Therefore continuous residence has been broken.

Example 2

An applicant:

- enters the UK on 1 September 2004 with entry clearance as a student which is valid until 31 October 2005
- leaves the UK on 25 October 2005, before their previous leave expired
- re-enters the UK with valid entry clearance as a student on 5 January 2006

The person had valid leave on the date of their departure and on the date of their return to the UK, and the time spent outside the UK was less than 6 months. Continuous residence has been maintained, even though the person entered the UK with a fresh grant of leave.

Breaks in lawful residence

This page tells you about circumstances that break lawful residence for long residence applications and when you can use discretion for short breaks in lawful residence.

Time spent outside the UK

Gaps in lawful residence

You may grant the application if an applicant:

- has short gaps in lawful residence through making previous applications out of time by no more than 28 calendar days where those gaps end before 24 November 2016
- has short gaps in lawful residence on or after 24 November 2016 but leave was granted in accordance with paragraph 39E of the Immigration Rules
- meets all the other requirements for lawful residence

The period of overstaying is calculated from the latest of the:

- end of the last period of leave to enter or remain granted (including where an in-time application was submitted but the application was considered invalid)
- end of any extension of leave under sections 3C or 3D of the Immigration Act 1971
- the point that a migrant is deemed to have received a written notice of invalidity, in relation to an in-time application for further leave to remain where that application was deemed invalid due to the failure by the applicant to provide biometrics

Periods of overstaying

When refusing an application on the grounds it was made by an applicant who had overstayed by more than 28 days before 24 November 2016, you must consider any evidence of exceptional circumstances which prevented the applicant from applying within the first 28 days of overstaying.

The threshold for what constitutes 'exceptional circumstances' is high, but could include delays resulting from unexpected or unforeseeable causes. For example:

- serious illness which meant the applicant or their representative was not able to submit the application in time – this must be supported by appropriate medical documentation
- travel or postal delays which meant the applicant or their representative was not able to submit the application in time

- inability to provide necessary documents – this would only apply in exceptional or unavoidable circumstances beyond the applicant’s control, for example:
 - it is the fault of the Home Office because it lost or delayed returning travel documents
 - there is a delay because the applicant cannot replace their documents quickly because of theft, fire or flood – the applicant must send evidence of the date of loss and the date replacement documents were sought

Any decision to exercise discretion and not refuse the application on these grounds must be authorised by a senior caseworker at senior executive officer (SEO) grade or above.

When granting leave in these circumstances, the applicant must be granted leave outside the rules for the same duration and conditions that would have applied had they been granted leave under the rules.

Time spent outside the UK

A person who is outside the UK will not be in breach of the Immigration Rules.

You can overlook a period of unlawful residence if the applicant leaves the UK after their valid leave has expired but before 24 November 2016, and:

- applies for entry clearance within 28 days of their original leave expiring
- returns to the UK with valid leave within 6 months of their original departure

Examples of gaps in lawful residence

The examples below show some instances when it may or may not be appropriate to grant the application. This is not a complete list and you must judge each application on the information it contains and discuss this with a senior caseworker.

Example 1

An applicant has a single gap in their lawful residence due to submitting an application 17 days out of time. All other applications have been submitted in time, throughout the 10 years period.

Question	Would you grant the application in this case?
Answer	Grant the application as the rules allow for a period of overstaying of 28 days or less when that period ends before 24 November 2016.

Example 2

An applicant has 3 gaps in their lawful residence due to submitting 3 separate applications out of time. These were 9, 17 and 24 days out of time.

Question	Would you grant the application in this case?
Answer	Yes. Grant the application as the rules allow for periods of overstaying of 28 days or less when that period ends before 24 November 2016.

Example 3

An applicant has a single gap in their lawful residence due to submitting an application 34 days out of time. The applicant has provided a letter from their consultant stating they were hospitalised during this period.

Question	Would you be right to use discretion in this case?
Answer	Yes. Even though the application was more than 28 days out of time, the absence occurred before 24 November 2016 and the applicant has provided sufficient evidence to demonstrate that there were exceptional reasons for the late application and has tried to maintain lawful residence throughout the rest of the 10 year period. You must confirm this with your senior executive office (SEO) senior caseworker.

Example 4

An applicant's leave expired on 10 July 2012 but they only departed the UK on the 1 August 2012. They submitted an application for entry clearance on the 5 August 2012. When returning to the UK on the 27 October 2012 they submitted a long residence application.

Question	Would you grant the application in this case?
Answer	Yes. Grant the application as the rules allow for periods of overstaying of 28 days or less when that period ends before 24 November 2016. This applicant submitted their application for entry clearance less than 28 days after their original grant of leave had expired and returned to the UK within 6 months of last leaving.

Example 5

An applicant's leave expired on 1 September 2013 and they departed the UK on 1 October 2013. They submitted an application for entry clearance within 11 days of departing and re-entered on 2 December 2013.

Question	Would you grant the application in this case?
Answer	No. They failed to depart the UK within 28 days of their original grant of leave expiring and so had a period of more than 28 days overstaying.

Out of time applications

This page tells you about 'out-of-time' applications submitted for 10 years long residence applications.

An applicant applying for an extension of stay or indefinite leave to remain (ILR) on the basis of long residence must not be in breach of the Immigration Rules.

Applications made before 24 November 2016

Where the application was made before 24 November 2016 a period of overstaying of 28 days or less on the date of application will be disregarded.

The 28 day period of overstaying is calculated from the latest of the:

- end of the last period of leave to enter or remain granted (including where an in-time application was submitted but the application was considered invalid)
- end of any extension of leave under sections 3C or 3D of the Immigration Act 1971
- the point that a migrant is deemed to have received a written notice of invalidity, in relation to an in-time application for further leave to remain where that application was deemed invalid due to the failure by the applicant to provide biometrics

When refusing an application on the grounds it was made by an applicant who has overstayed by more than 28 days, you must consider any evidence of exceptional circumstances which prevented the applicant from applying within the first 28 days of overstaying.

The threshold for what constitutes 'exceptional circumstances' is high, but could include delays resulting from unexpected or unforeseeable causes. For example:

- serious illness which meant the applicant or their representative was not able to submit the application in time – this must be supported by appropriate medical documentation
- travel or postal delays which meant the applicant or their representative was not able to submit the application in time
- inability to provide necessary documents – this would only apply in exceptional or unavoidable circumstances beyond the applicant's control, for example:
 - it is the fault of the Home Office because it lost or delayed returning travel documents
 - there is a delay because the applicant cannot replace their documents quickly because of theft, fire or flood – the applicant must send evidence of the date of loss and the date replacement documents were sought

Any decision to exercise discretion and not refuse the application on these grounds must be authorised by a senior caseworker at senior executive officer (SEO) grade or above. When granting leave in these circumstances, the applicant must be granted leave outside the rules for the same duration and conditions that would have applied had they been granted leave under the rules.

Applications made on or after 24 November 2016

Where an out of time application is submitted on or after 24 November 2016, you must consider whether to exercise discretion in line with paragraph 39E of the immigration rules. This must be authorised by a senior caseworker at senior executive officer (SEO) grade.

Example of out of time applications

Example 1

A person has leave to enter as a student, valid until 31 July 2016. The person submits an out of time application for leave to remain on 15 September 2016. The person is granted leave as a student on 15 October 2016.

Question	Is there a break in their lawful residence under the 10 years long residence rules?
Answer	Yes, the person submitted an out of time application. The person has a break in their continuous lawful residence, from the date their leave expired on 31 July 2016, until the date they were granted leave as a student on 15 October 2016.

Treatment of temporary admission or temporary release

This page tells you when temporary admission, temporary release or immigration bail counts as lawful residence for 10 years long residence applications.

Temporary admission or release or immigration bail only qualifies as lawful residence if leave to enter or leave to remain is later granted. For example, if an applicant is granted leave following a period of temporary admission, the time on temporary admission counts as lawful residence.

For an example of when temporary admission counts as lawful residence, see example 4 in the 'examples of gaps in lawful residence' section.

For more information, see Immigration Bail guidance

Example of how to consider temporary admission or temporary release

Example 1

A person applies for leave to enter at port on 31 January 1995, and is granted temporary admission. The person remains on temporary admission until 27 June 2003, when they are granted 4 years leave to enter until June 2007. On 1 February 2005, the person applies for indefinite leave under the 10 year rule.

Question	Has the person completed 10 years continuous lawful residence in the UK?
Answer	Yes, as the person was granted leave in 2003 following a period of temporary admission, their time on temporary admission between 1995 and 2003 counts as lawful residence, and the person has been here lawfully for 10 years.

Time awaiting a decision on an application or appeal

This page tells you when time spent in the UK awaiting a decision on an application or an appeal counts as lawful residence for long residence applications.

Sections 3C and 3D of the Immigration Act 1971 extend a person's leave in certain circumstances.

Section 3C and 3D leave prevents an individual becoming an overstayer while they are awaiting or appealing a decision.

An overstayer is a person who stays in the UK beyond the period of their leave. This is a criminal offence under section 24 of the Immigration Act 1971.

3C leave

Section 118 of the Nationality, Immigration and Asylum Act 2002 added section 3C to the Immigration Act 1971 to prevent an applicant from becoming an overstayer by extending their leave while they are:

- awaiting a decision on an in-time application
- exercising a right of appeal against the refusal of such an application

3D leave

Section 11 of the Immigration, Asylum and Nationality Act 2006 added section 3D to the Immigration Act 1971 to prevent a migrant from becoming an overstayer while they are exercising a right of appeal against a decision to curtail or revoke leave to enter or remain in the UK (if that decision leaves them with no leave).

When leave to enter or remain is curtailed or revoked, section 3D extends it while an appeal against that decision is:

- brought
- pending

Both 3C and 3D leave count as existing leave to enter or remain in the UK, and therefore as lawful residence for the purpose of the 10 year long residence rule.

A person cannot make a fresh application for leave while they have 3C or 3D leave pending the outcome of a decision on their outstanding application. This means that someone who reaches the 10 year threshold during this leave cannot apply for indefinite leave. This could occur in the following 2 situations:

The applicant completes 10 years continuous lawful residence while awaiting a decision on an application for further leave

If the application that has generated the 3C leave has not yet been decided, the applicant can vary the grounds of that application to include a request for leave on the basis of long residence. If a long residence application would attract a higher fee than the initial application, the applicant must pay the balance before the varied application can be considered. For more information, see:

- Immigration Act 1971
- Specified application forms and procedures

The applicant completes 10 years continuous lawful residence while awaiting a decision of an appeal

A person may complete 10 years continuous lawful residence whilst they are awaiting the outcome of an appeal and submit an application on this basis. Under sections 3C and 3D, it is not possible to submit a new application while an appeal is outstanding. However, the applicant can submit further grounds to be considered at appeal.

If the applicant has an outstanding appeal against a decision to refuse leave to remain or indefinite leave to remain, and submits an application for long residence, you must void the long residence application and refund the fee. You must create a file or sub-file and mark it 'PRIORITY'. You must send the file or sub-file to the presenting officers unit (POU) dealing with the appeal. You must send a letter to the applicant or their representative informing them their application has been linked with their outstanding appeal. You must use Doc Gen letter ICD.3207 for this purpose.

If the appeal is against a decision to curtail or revoke, and the immigration decision was made on or after 31 August 2006, you must follow the same process but you must use Doc Gen letter ICD.3258.

Out of time appeals

Where an appeal has been lodged out of time (OoT) section 3C leave ends if the person does not appeal or seek permission to appeal within the relevant time limit. It is not resurrected if the relevant tribunal subsequently accepts an application for permission to appeal out of time. This is because section 3C leave exists only where it is a seamless continuation of the original leave.

This means that a person who was on 3C leave, but fails to appeal or seek permission to appeal within the relevant deadline, will become an overstayer once that deadline has expired. They will remain an overstayer until any subsequent grant of leave.

When considering a long residence application in which a previous OoT appeal has been submitted following:

- an in time application

- an application made no more than 28 days after the previous leave expired and where the application was submitted before 24 November 2016

you should normally use discretion to disregard any break in continuous lawful residence where the appeal is subsequently allowed. Any discretion on this basis will result in a grant outside of the Immigration Rules.

When considering a long residence application in which a previous OoT appeal has been submitted following an application made on or after 24 November 2016, you should only use discretion where leave was granted in accordance with paragraph 39E.

Extended leave under previous legislation

You must be aware of legislation that was in force for extending leave before sections 3C and 3D were amended. If the applicant lodged an appeal against a decision to refuse or curtail leave prior to 3C and 3D being amended, their leave may have expired before their appeal was heard. This means applicants who had appeals allowed before Sections 3C and 3D were amended may have breaks in their continuous lawful residence while their appeals are pending.

Before 2 October 2000, people who made in time applications had their leave to remain extended by the Variation Of Leave Order (VOLO). VOLO extended existing leave until a decision was made on an application, and also extended leave by 28 days from the date the application was refused or withdrawn. Leave was not extended further while an appeal was pending.

Section 3D was introduced on 31 August 2006. Prior to this, it was possible for a person to submit a fresh application while an appeal against curtailment or revocation of leave was pending. Before 31 August 2006, an applicant's leave was not extended whilst their appeal against curtailment or revocation was outstanding, but existing leave would not be considered to have been cancelled until the date that appeal rights had been exhausted.

See 3C and 3D guidance for further information.

Time spent in the UK with a right to reside under EEA regulations

This page tells you how to consider a long residence application when a person has spent time in the UK with a right to reside under the European Economic Area (EEA) regulations.

Time spent in the UK does not count as lawful residence under paragraph 276A of the Immigration Rules for third country nationals who have spent time in the UK as:

- the spouse, civil partner or other family member of a European Union (EU) national
- an EEA national exercising their treaty rights to live in the UK but have not qualified for permanent residence
- former family members who have retained a right of residence

During the time spent in the UK under the provisions of the EEA regulations, the individuals are not subject to immigration control, and would not be required to have leave to enter or leave to remain. See EEA Nationals guidance for further information.

However, you must apply discretion and count time spent in the UK as lawful residence for an EU or EEA national or their family members exercising their treaty rights to reside in the UK.

Sufficient evidence must be provided to demonstrate that the applicant has been exercising treaty rights throughout any period that they are seeking to rely on for the purposes of meeting the long residence rules.

This does not affect the rights of family members of EEA nationals to permanent residence in the UK, where they qualify for it after a period of 5 years residence in the UK - Regulation 15 of the Immigration (European Economic Area) Regulations 2006. More information can be found on the GOV.UK website – apply for a UK residence card.

If an applicant was in the UK with a right to reside under European Economic Area (EEA) regulations, continuous residence is not broken if they leave the UK and are then re-admitted under the EEA regulations.

When granting a Long Residence application in which a person has relied on a period of leave in the UK exercising treaty rights as an EEA national or their family member, any grant of leave must be made outside the Immigration Rules.

Time spent in the UK as a British citizen

Time spent in the UK as a British citizen must be counted as lawful residence. People may have spent time in the UK as a British citizen and since renounced their British citizenship. This time spent as a British citizen in the UK would still count as lawful residence for 10 year long residence applications.

Time spent in the UK whilst exempt from immigration control

This page tells you when time spent in the UK counts as lawful residence for 10 year long residence applications for applicants who are exempt from immigration control.

Time spent in the UK exempt from immigration control must be counted as lawful residence. People exempt from immigration control include diplomats and members of the armed forces.

Deemed leave for diplomats and 28 days leave outside the rules for former members of armed forces

'Deemed leave' is the 90 days that diplomats are given once their period of exemption from immigration control period ends.

Former members of armed forces will normally be granted 28 days leave outside the Immigration Rules when they cease to be exempt on discharge.

By the end of the 28 or 90 days, the person must either:

- submit an application for leave
- depart the UK

A person on deemed leave does not receive an endorsement in their passport. However, a former member of the armed forces will have their passport endorsed.

If a person submits an application to extend their stay in the UK within 28 or 90 days of their exemption ending, and is granted a period of leave, their continuous lawful residence is not broken.

If a person remains in the UK, and does not submit an application for further leave after the 28 or 90 days described above, their continuous lawful residence is broken.

For an example of time spent in the UK while exempt from immigration control counting as lawful continuous residence, see the example of how to consider exempt leave.

Effect on continuous residence

Continuous residence is not broken if a person:

- leaves and then returns to the UK during a period of exemption
- continues to meet all other requirements of long residence, set out in paragraph 276A(a) of the Immigration Rules

If a person leaves the UK following the end of their exemption and during their period of deemed leave, continuous residence is not broken, even if they return to the UK after their 90 days deemed leave has expired. This is provided they meet all the other long residence requirements in paragraph 276A(a) of the Immigration Rules.

Continuous residence is not broken if a person is granted a short period of leave at the end of their exemption and leaves the UK providing that they:

- return to the UK with a fresh grant of leave
- meet all the other requirements of long residence in paragraph 276A(a) of the Immigration Rules

For more information on the long residence requirements, see Immigration Rules 276A-276D.

If a person applies for leave while they are still exempt, you must inform them their application will be considered once their exemption ends.

For more information on exemptions, see persons exempt from control.

Example of how to consider exempt leave

Example 1

A person working as a diplomat who was exempt from control ends their employment and ceases to be exempt from immigration control on 31 December 2006. The person submits an application for leave to remain on 1 February 2007, and is granted leave until 30 May 2009.

As a diplomat, this person has deemed leave until 31 March 2007 and submitted their application before the deemed leave expired. This means that the person had continuous lawful residence during this period.

Public interest

This page tells you factors you must consider before granting indefinite leave to remain for long residence applications.

On most occasions, a person who meets the requirements for continuous lawful residence should be granted indefinite leave to remain. This is unless a grant is against the public interest.

You must consider whether there are any reasons why it would be undesirable on public interest grounds to grant indefinite leave. In considering this you must take into account the person's:

- age
- strength of connections in the UK
- personal history, including character, conduct, associations and employment record
- domestic circumstances
- compassionate circumstances
- any representations on the person's behalf

The applicant must also not fall for refusal under the general grounds for refusal.

You must assess the factors in paragraph 276B (ii) to decide whether a grant of indefinite leave would be against the public interest. You must look at reasons for and against granting indefinite leave using the factors listed and, where necessary, weigh up whether a grant of indefinite leave would be in the public interest.

If the applicant has not completed the necessary period of residence, they will not be able to satisfy the rules for long residence, regardless of any of the factors listed above. However, even if an applicant has not completed the required period of residence and therefore falls for refusal, you must also consider any reasons why the applicant may fall for refusal under paragraph 276B(ii), and include these reasons in your refusal notice.

Some factors would suggest that it would be appropriate to refuse leave. You must weigh those factors against the compassionate circumstances, if any and all the other circumstances, such as strength of connections to the UK, domestic circumstances of the case, and then decide whether a grant of indefinite leave would be against the public interest. More detailed information on each of these factors is provided later in the following sections.

It is important that you take into account all of the circumstances of the case before you decide whether a grant of indefinite leave would be in the public interest.

You must not refuse leave to someone who has been in the UK for the required period without consulting a senior caseworker. You must also consult guidance on refusing an application on general grounds for refusal if refusing under paragraph 276B(ii).

Age

This page tells you when a person's age may be a relevant factor when you are considering a long residence application.

You must take an applicant's age into consideration in cases when you are considering refusing on other relevant points under paragraph 276B(ii). You must consider whether an applicant's age would weigh against refusal.

Age may be a relevant factor if the applicant is an unaccompanied child under the age of 18, or if the applicant or their dependants have spent their formative years in the UK and adapted to life here.

Strength of connections in the UK

This page tells you when a person's connections to the UK may be a relevant factor when you are considering a long residence application.

You must take an applicant's strength of connections into consideration in cases when you are considering refusing on other relevant points under paragraph 276B(ii). You must consider whether an applicant's connections with the UK would weigh against refusal.

The family life a person has in the UK must be taken into account in assessing the strength of their connections to the UK. This may be particularly strong if they are married to or have established a similar relationship with a settled person. The person may have other close relatives settled in the UK. The strength and closeness of the relationship will determine how strong a factor this may be. Similarly, if a person's close relatives are not in the UK, this may call into question the strength of the person's connection to the UK.

Owning property or a business may support the view that an applicant has shown long term commitment and a connection to the UK. However, on its own, this would not be a significant factor. Factors such as the length of time the individual has owned the business or property, or whether the business is legally operating must be considered. If someone mentions their business interests as proof of commitment to the UK, they must provide supporting documentary evidence. The applicant will be required to show further proof of strong connections to the UK.

If the applicant has contributed positively to society, for example through significant investment or charitable work, this may be another factor in their favour, although this is unlikely to be decisive on its own.

Personal history

This page tells you when a person's personal history may be a relevant factor when you are considering a long residence application.

You must take an applicant's personal history into consideration in cases when you are considering refusing on other relevant points under paragraph 276B(ii).

Character, conduct and associations go beyond criminal convictions and allow you to consider whether the applicant's activities in the UK, or abroad, makes it undesirable for you to grant indefinite leave.

This could include concerns about the applicant on the basis of:

- national security
- war crimes
- crimes against humanity
- serious criminality, whether convicted or not
- other activities that make the applicant's presence in the UK not conducive to the public good

Applicants who do not satisfy the general grounds within the Immigration Rules now face refusal under the rules for settlement. See general grounds for refusal for more information.

Applications for settlement on the basis of long residence must be refused if:

- the requirements set out in paragraph 276B are not met
- 276B (ii) includes non conducive to the public good
- 276B (iii) includes any reason within the general grounds for refusal

Official – sensitive: start of section

The information on this page has been removed as it is restricted for internal Home Office use.

Official – sensitive: end of section

A history of anti-social behaviour or low level criminality might be grounds to refuse indefinite leave, especially if it has led to the issue of a Criminal Behaviour Order.

The applicant's employment record will often be a significant consideration. You must consider what the person has been doing while they have been in the UK, and what economic contribution, if any, they have made. Whilst not having a record is not in itself a reason to refuse leave, having a good employment record along with strong ties with the UK would count in a person's favour, if they have not been a burden on public finances but have, in fact, contributed through income tax and national insurance contributions. Equally, the lack of such a record, and any charges they have made on public finances, would count against them.

An applicant's conduct includes their immigration history. This will not be relevant in most cases brought under the 10 year rule, because the requirement that residence must be continuously lawful implies that the applicant is not an immigration offender. However, previous immigration offences that occurred before their 10 years continuous lawful residence must be taken into account, and will count against them.

Domestic circumstances

This page tells you about when a person's domestic circumstances may be a relevant factor when you are considering a long residence application.

If the applicant has dependant children living in the UK, this could be a factor against refusal on the basis of paragraph 276B(ii), if they have lived in the UK for a substantial period of time and are fully integrated here.

If there are dependant children, and you intend to refuse the case, you must consider the Home Office's duty to safeguard and promote child welfare.

The presence of another settled person who is routinely dependent on the applicant, for example a disabled relative, could also be a factor against refusal. For further guidance please see the GOV.UK website – apply to remain in the UK with family.

Compassionate circumstances

This page tells you when compassionate circumstances may be a relevant factor when you are considering refusing under paragraph 276B(ii). You must consider whether there are any compassionate circumstances that would weigh against refusal.

It is not possible to define all potential compassionate circumstances, but it might, depending on the circumstances, include:

- significant or serious illness
- frailty
- particularly difficult family circumstances

Compassionate circumstances are most likely to be relevant if the applicant has been here for long enough to qualify for indefinite leave, but there are other factors, such as criminal convictions or an adverse immigration history, that suggest a grant of indefinite leave might not be appropriate.

Representations received on a person's behalf

This page tells you when representations received on the person's behalf may be a relevant factor when you are considering refusing a long residence application under paragraph 276B(ii).

All representations raised on behalf of the applicant must be carefully assessed, even if these have been dismissed in previous applications. However, such representations are unlikely to be decisive, either in favour of or against an applicant.

You must weigh those factors against the compassionate circumstances, if any, and all the other circumstances of the case, and then decide whether a grant of indefinite leave would be against the public interest.

Grant or refuse an extension of stay in the UK

This page tells you about how to grant or refuse long residence applications for an extension of leave in the UK.

Granting an extension

You must grant the applicant leave to remain on the basis of long residence if the applicant meets all of the requirements of paragraph 276A2 of the Immigration Rules and the requirements as applied in the Immigration Act 2014 including the Immigration (Health Charge) Order 2015.

This includes applicants who have applied for indefinite leave to remain but they are unable to meet 276B (iii) and/or (iv) which say that the applicant:

- does not fall for refusal under the general grounds for refusal
- has sufficient knowledge of the English language, and about life in the UK, unless they are under the age of 18 or aged 65 or over at the time they make their application

For more information see:

- Extension requirements
- Immigration Rules 276A-276D
- General grounds for refusal

If the applicant has less than 20 years residence in the UK, you must grant 2 years leave to remain on the same condition code they had in their previous grant of leave. This applies even where the applicant would not qualify for further leave in that category if they were to apply separately for it, or if that category no longer exists. To ensure that the applicant is granted leave with the same conditions when using condition codes 2/4 or 4B, check the conditions code table.

If the applicant has more than 20 years residence in the UK the grant of leave must not contain any restriction on employment.

The extension of leave to remain is granted under paragraph 276A2 of the long residence category of the Immigration Rules, and not as an extension of their previous category of leave to remain. Applicants must therefore meet the leave to remain rules for long residence and not the leave to remain rules for their previous category.

If an applicant was granted an extension of stay on an application made before 9 July 2012 they will remain subject to the rules that were in force on 8 July 2012. This means an applicant granted leave following 14 years long residence can be granted further leave or indefinite leave to remain (ILR) on that basis, even though that provision no longer exists.

If you grant leave to remain in this category you must use the following statistical category:

- X3 Other – Extn other reasons

Refusing an extension

You must refuse the application if the applicant does not meet the requirements of paragraph 276A1 of the Immigration Rules.

Grant or refuse indefinite leave

This page tells you how to grant or refuse applications for indefinite leave on the basis of long residence.

Granting indefinite leave

You must grant the applicant indefinite leave on the basis of long residence if:

- the applicant meets all of the requirements of paragraph 276B of the Immigration Rules
- none of the general grounds for refusal apply

For more information see related links:

Refusing indefinite leave

You should normally refuse indefinite leave if:

- the applicant does not meet the requirements of paragraph 276B
- any of the general grounds for refusal apply

As applicants in this category will have spent a number of years in the UK, there may be human rights grounds to consider if the applicant does not satisfy the long residence requirements. Where applicable, you must consider the following provisions:

- Appendix FM, partner and parent 10-year routes for claims on the basis of family life (see Appendix FM of the Immigration Rules)
- Paragraph 276ADE(1) for claims on the basis of private life, see considering an application in the private life route

For examples of refusal wording, see indefinite leave refusal wording.

If you refuse the application, you must use the appropriate statistical code from the following:
