Introduction

The state of Brunei is situated on the north-western coast of the island of Borneo on the South China Sea. It is surrounded on all other sides by the Malaysian State of Sarawak which divides Brunei into two unconnected parts: the eastern part of which is the rural Temburong district, and the western part which consists of Brunei Muara, Tutong and Belait districts. Brunei acquired full independence from the United Kingdom in 1984.

Geographical names policy

Recommended geographical names are those in Roman-script as found on official Brunei-produced sources, where possible. The National Committee of Geographical Names Jawatankuasa Kebangsaan Nama Geografi (JKNG), deals with the standardisation of place names in Brunei. Official maps are produced by the Brunei Survey Department. The Brunei Survey Department's Geoportal⁶ can be used to access geospatial information (including geographical names) online.

¹ It is called Bahasa Melayu ("Malay language") in Malay. Language codes given in this Factfile are ISO-639 codes.

³ No state title as such occurs in the Brunei Constitution of 1959, but the name Negara Brunei Darussalam (meaning Nation of Brunei, the Abode of Peace) was proclaimed as the official name of the state in June 1983. However, Brunei Darussalam is officially preferred by the Brunei authorities in English-language contexts.

⁴ Both are official scripts. Jawi is the modified Arabic script used to write the Malay language.

⁵ Often referred to as BSB.

Languages

Brunei's official language is Malay⁷ but English is also widely used and is the language of instruction in most subjects in schools. The Brunei Constitution states that an English version shall be provided for all official documents. Although Standard Malay (msa) is the official language of Brunei, the Brunei Malay variety (kxd) is more widely spoken. It is substantially different to Standard Malay and is spoken by about two thirds of the population. A cultural pact in 1972 between Malaysia and Indonesia led to a common spelling system for the Roman-script Malay language⁸ for the two countries. Although Brunei did not sign up to the spelling reform, it joined the Language Council for Indonesia and Malaysia in 1986 and spellings in Brunei have become more in line with those of Indonesia and Malaysia. This is reflected in the modern spelling of generic terms kampung (village) and tanjung (cape, headland), rather than kampong and tanjong respectively.

Jawi, one of the official scripts of Brunei, is a modified Arabic script that is used to write the Malay language (which is unrelated to the Arabic language). Its use is being promoted but is mainly limited to religious, cultural and some administrative purposes. Islam is the official religion of Brunei, thus the Arabic language, as used in the Quran, is taught in Islamic schools. Most road signs in Brunei are written with Roman script, but some street names also have Jawi script.

The indigenous minority languages of Brunei including Belait, Bisaya, Iban and Tutong are in decline due to the increased use of Brunei Malay⁹. Chinese (including Mandarin and Cantonese) is spoken by ethnic Chinese inhabitants.

Administrative structure

At first-order administrative level (ADM1), Brunei is divided into four districts (Malay: daerah): Belait¹⁰, Brunei-Muara¹¹, Temburong¹², and Tutong. The districts are further subdivided into mukim (sub-districts) at second-order (ADM2) level. Mukim are further divided into kampung (villages). Details of the ADM1s of Brunei are listed on the next page.
