Introduction

Modern Turkey was founded in 1923 principally from the Anatolian<sup>4</sup> peninsula (Asia Minor) remnant of the Ottoman Empire. It bridges South-Eastern Europe and Western Asia. The European portion is known as Thrace (tur: Trakya) and forms 3% of the country.

Turkey shares land borders with eight countries; Greece and Bulgaria to the west; Georgia, Armenia, Iran, and the Azerbaijani exclave of Naxçıvan (Nakhichevan) to the east; and Iraq and Syria to the south. The north coast lies on the Black Sea, the strategically important Bosphorus Strait<sup>5</sup> connecting the Black Sea to the Sea of Marmara, which is connected by the Dardanelles Strait<sup>6</sup> to the Aegean Sea, and thereby to the Mediterranean Sea on which the south coast lies.

Geographical names policy

Geographical names in Turkey are found in Roman script and should be taken as found on official Turkish sources.

Language/s

The official language of Turkey is Turkish, which is written in Roman script.

Turkish is from the Altaic family of languages. For centuries the written language of the Ottoman Empire was Ottoman Turkish, essentially Turkish in structure with some Persian and Arabic vocabulary, and written in Perso-Arabic script. It had long been felt that these multiple linguistic influences on Ottoman Turkish made spelling and writing complicated. When the Turkish Republic was founded in the 1920's, Turkey's first president, Mustafa Kemal Atatürk<sup>7</sup>, made language reform an important part of the nationalist programme. The Modern Turkish Roman-script orthography was created to make the language easier to read and write and there were moves to promote the use of more purely Turkish words.

<sup>5</sup> The Turkish names are Karadeniz Boğazı (Black Sea Strait) to denote the northern half, İstanbul Boğazı (Istanbul Strait) to denote the southern half and Boğaziçi to indicate the middle of the strait. The conventional name Bosphorus is also seen as Bosphorus.

The Turkish alphabet has 29 letters (21 consonants and 8 vowels) containing most of the English alphabet apart from q, w and x, plus ç, ğ, ı, ö, ş, and ü. Note the difference between the dotted and un-dotted i/ı, ı/i which represent two different sounds. The letter ı sounds similar to the 'i' in sit, and the letter ı sounds similar to the 'e' in open. For a variety of reasons the letters a, i, and u are occasionally written with a circumflex, but this is increasingly uncommon.

Turkish is an agglutinative language which denotes connections (e.g. person, tense, mood, plural) by means of suffixes. It also features vowel harmony, in which subsequent vowels in a word or suffix follow the vowel properties (rounded/unrounded, front-produced/back-produced) of the previous vowel. These features are evident in toponymy. For example, the generic term "il" means "province", but when it is attached to a specific province name it carries a connecting suffix "-i": hence "Adana İli" (Adana province). Plurals are formed by adding the suffix "-ler" or "-lar" as appropriate; hence the plural of "il" is "iller".

Kurdish

Approximately 18% of the Turkish population is Kurdish-speaking<sup>8</sup>. The Kurdish spoken by the majority of Kurds in Turkey is Kurmanji (kmr)<sup>9</sup> – also known as Northern Kurdish. Kurmanji is usually written in Roman script, with an extended Roman alphabet of 31 letters (see page 4). It is spoken in the eastern and southeastern provinces of Turkey (and also in other parts of Turkey including isolated Kurdish villages)<sup>10</sup> but it does not have official status. In spite of this, in the eastern and southeastern provinces, road signs are often found showing both Turkish and Kurdish names. This sign showing the Turkish names with the Kurdish names in brackets is in the Diyarbakır province<sup>11</sup>:

Other minority languages include Armenian, Zazaki, Adyghe, Arabic, and Ladino<sup>12</sup>.

Turkish place names

An initiative by the Turkish government in the early part of the twentieth century aimed to create Turkish unity by replacing all geographical names that were not of Turkish origin<sup>13</sup>. Some 28,000 geographical names were changed. Most of the name changes occurred in the eastern provinces of the country where minority populations tend to live. An example elsewhere is Konstantinoupolis, “City of Constantine” in Greek, which was changed to Istanbul<sup>14</sup> in 1930.

In the 1980’s, the Turkish government stated that approximately 12,000 village names that were non-Turkish, understood to originate from non-Turkish roots, and identified as causing confusion, had been examined and replaced with Turkish names<sup>15</sup>.

At the culmination of the policy, no geographical names of non-Turkish (Greek, Kurdish, Armenian, Arabic, Assyrian, Georgian, Laz) origin remained. Some of the newer names resembled the original names, but with revised Turkish connotations i.e. the Armenian name of the island Aghtamar (in Van Gölü (Lake Van)) was changed to Akdamar (meaning “white vein” in Turkish), which bears no relation to the island, but was chosen simply because the pronunciation is close to Aghtamar.

However, the original names persist and continue to be used in local dialects throughout the country. Legislation was introduced in September 2013 to restore the former geographical names (primarily of Kurdish villages)<sup>16</sup>. For example, over 700 place names in the Van province have been renamed to their former Kurdish names. According to a report in The Armenian Weekly<sup>17</sup>, village signs would also be changed to include the Kurdish and Armenian names. The report includes this road sign to the town of Edremit in Van province is written in Kurdish, Turkish, Armenian and English:

<sup>23</sup> Antakya is the usual name of the administrative centre of the province of Hatay, which is situated within a metropolitan municipality called Hatay.

<sup>24</sup> The site of the ancient city of Smyrna is within the boundary of the city of İzmir. The city was generally referred to as Smyrna until the Turkish Postal Service Law 1930, made İzmir the internationally recognised name. (This law also changed the name of Constantinople to İstanbul; and Angora to Ankara).
