What is the problem under consideration? Why is government intervention necessary?

On 21 April 2010, in the case of R (on the application of F and Angus Aubrey Thompson) v Secretary of State for the Home Department [2010] UKSC 17, the Supreme Court made a declaration of incompatibility under s. 4 of the Human Rights Act 1998 in respect of notification requirements for an indefinite period under Part 2 of the Sexual Offences Act 2003. The UK Government is required to take steps to rectify this legislative incompatibility. The Supreme Court specifically found indefinite notification requirements for sex offenders, with no opportunity for review, to be incompatible with Article 8 of the European Convention on Human Rights (ECHR).

What are the policy objectives and the intended effects?

Following this judgment, the Home Office has worked with key partners, including the Association of Chief Police Officers (ACPO), and the National Offender Management Service (NOMS) in order to ascertain how best to give effect to the Court's judgment. The objective of the policy outlined in this IA is to:

1. Develop a fair and proportionate response to the Judgment which will amend Part 2 of the Sexual Offences Act 2003 to ensure compliance with Article 8 of the ECHR;
2. Respond to the judgment in a timely way;
3. Ensure the policy developed strikes an appropriate balance between individual rights & public protection.

What policy options have been considered, including any alternatives to regulation? Please justify preferred option (further details in Evidence Base)

Option 1: Do nothing. It is not a practical option for the Home Office to ignore this judgment. The Home Office is required to take steps to remedy the legislative incompatibility. Options considered include:

Option 2: Automatic removal from the notification requirements after a fixed period of time;

Option 3: Police or Multi Agency Public Protection Arrangements (MAPPA) type review mechanism where offenders apply to be removed from the Sex Offenders Register;

Option 4: Police or MAPPA type review mechanism with a prescribed right of appeal to the Magistrates' Court;

Option 5: Fully court administered review mechanism.

We recommend developing Option 4, for the reasons set out under section E.

Will the policy be reviewed? It will be reviewed. If applicable, set review date: 07/2017

I have read the Impact Assessment and I am satisfied that (a) it represents a fair and reasonable view of the expected costs, benefits and impact of the policy, and (b) that the benefits justify the costs.

Description and scale of key monetised costs by 'main affected groups'

It has not been possible to monetise the costs, realised in terms of a possible increase in the risk of re-offending, of this policy option.

Other key non-monetised costs by 'main affected groups'

Amendments to the ViSOR database will be required.
It has not been possible to assess the impact of ending notification requirements on re-offending rates and detection rates. The impact on re-offending and detections is, therefore, not quantified.
Additionally, this option may increase pressure on police and other agency resources in terms of potential increase in applications for other risk management tools such as Sexual Offences Prevention Orders.

Description and scale of key monetised benefits by 'main affected groups'

The benefit to the police (£1.4m annual average) will be realised in terms of a possible reduction in resources spent administering the required management of offenders whose notification requirements are discontinued. Under this policy option, notification requirements would automatically be discontinued after a fixed period of 15 years for all offenders irrespective of the level of risk they may pose.

Other key non-monetised benefits by 'main affected groups'

The policy will realise a non-monetised benefit in terms of remedying the declaration of incompatibility in respect of notification requirements for an indefinite period under Part 2 of the Sexual Offences Act 2003. It is considered that this policy will achieve Article 8 compliance and avoid further, potentially expensive, legal challenge.

Key assumptions/sensitivities/risks	Discount rate (%)	3.5%
Assumes 100 per cent of sex offenders will have their notification requirements discontinued 15 years after their initial notification. Benefits are realised in terms of a reduction in the police resources spent administering the required management of sex offenders, which is assumed to include home visits (ranging from annual visits for low risk offenders to monthly visits for very high risk offenders) as well as ViSOR updates three times a year.

Description and scale of key monetised costs by 'main affected groups'

The cost of reviewing sex offender notification requirements will fall predominantly on the police, assuming 13 hours of police time and 6 hours of other agency time to complete the review. The scale of the costs depends on the proportion of eligible sex offenders who apply for a review of their notification requirements, which cannot be predicted. The cost of producing guidance and awareness raising / training for police and other agencies is not expected to exceed a maximum estimate of £50,000.

Other key non-monetised costs by 'main affected groups'

Amendments to the ViSOR database will be required. It has not been possible to assess the impact of ending notification requirements on re-offending rates and detection rates. The impact on re-offending and detections is, therefore, not quantified.

The benefit to the police will be realised in terms of a possible reduction in resources spent administering the required management of offenders whose notification requirements are discontinued under the review process. It has not been possible to estimate the proportion of reviews leading to discontinuation of notification requirements.

Other key non-monetised benefits by 'main affected groups'

Table E.2 within this assessment presents a range of scenarios to illustrate potential volumes of review applications. It is not possible to estimate accurately the proportion of relevant qualifying offenders who will seek a review. Therefore, a range has been applied that between 0% and 100% of eligible sex offenders will apply to have their notification requirements reviewed. It is considered that this option carries a risk of further legal challenge. Other assumptions are set out in Section E.

Description and scale of key monetised costs by 'main affected groups'

The cost of reviewing sex offender notification requirements will fall predominantly on the police and Her Majesty's Courts and Tribunal Service (HMCTS). The scale of the costs depends on the proportion of eligible sex offenders who apply for a review of their notification requirements, which cannot be predicted. The cost of producing guidance and awareness raising / training for police and other agencies is not expected to exceed a maximum estimate of £50,000.

Other key non-monetised costs by 'main affected groups'

Amendments to the ViSOR database will be required. The proportion of offenders unsuccessful at the review is not known so it has not been possible to monetise the cost of appeals as it has not been possible to estimate the likely volume of appeals. Any appeals will incur costs for the police, practitioners, and HMCTS. It has not been possible to assess the impact of ending notification requirements on re-offending rates and detection rates. The impact on re-offending and detections is, therefore, not quantified.

A. Strategic Overview

A.1 Background

The Sexual Offences Act 2003, introduced in May 2004, provided a comprehensive new legislative framework for sexual offences, covering offences against adults, children and familial sexual offences. It also made amendments to the law governing the sex offenders' register and civil orders, originally introduced in the Sex Offenders Act 1997.

Currently, under Part 2 of the Sexual Offences Act 2003, a person who, in respect of an offence listed under Schedule 3 to the Act, is or has been sentenced to imprisonment for a term of 30 months or more, will become subject to the notification requirements for an indefinite period. Additionally, where an offender, in respect of the relevant offence, is made subject to a restriction order, the notification requirements apply for an indefinite period.

Recent figures indicate that there are 53,501 offenders in England and Wales who are subject to the notification requirements (commonly referred to as the sex offenders' register). Of these, approximately 28,667 are subject to the notification requirements for an indefinite period¹.

On 21 April 2010, in the case of R (on the application of F and Angus Aubrey Thompson) v Secretary of State for the Home Department [2010] UKSC 17, the Supreme Court upheld an earlier decision of the Court of Appeal and made a declaration of incompatibility under s. 4 of the Human Rights Act 1998 in respect of notification requirements for an indefinite period under section 82 of the Sexual Offences Act 2003.

Importantly, the leading Supreme Court judge in this case, Lord Phillips, noted that the imposition of notification requirements pursue a legitimate aim but said that 'there must be some circumstances in which an appropriate tribunal could reliably conclude that the risk of an individual carrying out a further sexual offence can be discounted to the extent that continuance of notification requirements is unjustified².'

Lord Phillips also noted in his judgment that registration systems for sexual offenders are not uncommon in other jurisdictions and that almost all of these have provisions for review. Other jurisdictions with review mechanisms include: Ireland, France, Australia, Canada, South Africa and the USA. The mechanisms differ across the various jurisdictions. A number of the systems include a review undertaken by a Court, while in France the review is undertaken by the prosecutor.

The UK Government is required to take steps to rectify this legislative incompatibility. As sex offender policy is a devolved matter, it is open to Scotland and Northern Ireland to legislate separately in response to the judgment. Following a period of consultation on The Sexual Offences Act 2003 (Remedial) (Scotland) Order 2010, this order was revoked and replaced by The Sexual Offences Act 2003 (Remedial) (Scotland) Order 2011, which came into force on 28th January 2011. A consultation on proposals in Northern Ireland closed on 5th October 2011.

In England and Wales, following careful consideration of the representations received, as prescribed by the non-urgent remedial Order process (under Section 10 of the Human Rights Act 1998), the Government has now laid the draft Sexual Offences Act 2003 (Remedial) Order 2012 before Parliament.

A.2 Groups Affected

The proposals as set out in this Impact Assessment will have effect in England and Wales only.

Sex offenders who are subject to the notification requirements for an indefinite period, victims of sexual crime, all police forces in England and Wales, agencies that make up the responsible authority (police, prisons, probation) and agencies with a duty to co-operate under the Multi-Agency Public Protection Arrangements, Her Majesty's Courts and Tribunals Service and the Home Office.

A.3 Consultation

There has been no formal consultation process on the recommended option. The Home Office has worked closely with the agencies which will be affected by the proposals to develop the options for responding to the Supreme Court judgment.

As there is no suitable Bill available that would provide a vehicle to take the required legislative amendment forward, the Home Office is seeking to amend the current law by way of a (non-urgent) remedial Order made under section 10(2) of the Human Rights Act 1998. As part of the remedial Order process, the proposals are subject to Parliamentary scrutiny. The proposal to make the remedial Order was laid before both Houses for an initial 60 day period, during which time Members and Peers were able to make representations. The Joint Committee on Human Rights issued their report on the proposal for the draft Order on 13th October 2011. Following careful consideration of the representations received, as prescribed by the non-urgent remedial Order process (under Section 10 of the Human Rights Act 1998), the Government has now laid the draft Sexual Offences Act 2003 (Remedial) Order 2012 before Parliament. This draft Order is laid before Parliament for a further 60 day period, after which approval from both Houses must be sought. The Order will only be made and brought into effect once it is approved by both Houses.

B. Rationale

The Supreme Court declaration of incompatibility in the case of R v F and Thompson requires that the Government take steps to remedy the relevant primary legislation and it is not a practical option for the Government to do nothing in the light of this ruling. The Government has chosen to use the Remedial Order process as we consider that this issue should be addressed expeditiously but there are no suitable First Session bills to rectify the incompatibility. The Joint Committee on Human Rights agree with the Government's assessment that there are compelling reasons for using the (non-urgent) remedial order process to introduce a form of review into the registration of sex offenders³.

C. Objectives

Following the Supreme Court judgment, the Home Office has worked with key partners, including the Association of Chief Police Officers (ACPO), and the National Offender Management Service (NOMS) in order to ascertain how best to give effect to the ruling. Public safety will always be the first priority for the Government. The objective of the recommended policy option outlined in this Impact Assessment is to respond to the judgment in a timely way and develop a response which strikes an appropriate balance between individual rights and public safety.

D. Options

Option 1: Do nothing

To do nothing would mean that there would be no mechanism for reviewing the indefinite notification requirements and no way for individuals subject to notification requirements for an indefinite period to be removed from the sex offenders' register. It is not a practical option for the Home Office to do nothing in response to the Supreme Court finding of Article 8 incompatibility.

Should the Home Office fail to act in responding to the judgment, this would leave the Government vulnerable to further claims for compensation including from offenders bringing cases directly to the

³ Joint Committee on Human Rights, 'Proposal for the Sexual Offences Act 2003 (Remedial Order 2011)', Nineteenth Report of Session 2010 - 2012

Court in Strasbourg, which has the power to award compensation for the same human rights breaches that the Supreme Court found in this case.

The Supreme Court cannot strike down legislation which it rules is incompatible with the ECHR. It is for Parliament to legislate to correct any incompatibility. In practice, the Government of the day has always responded to declarations of incompatibility – whether in Strasbourg or by the Supreme Court or Law Lords – by making proposals to remedy these incompatibilities.

Option 2: Automatic removal from the notification requirements after a fixed period of time.

This option would only partly meet the Government's objective. In effect, this option would extend the existing arrangements under section 82 of the Sexual Offences Act 2003 for sentences of less than 30 months, where the length of sentence determines the duration of the notification requirements.

There would be safeguards to this option in respect of offenders assessed to present a significant continuing risk, where the police could apply to the courts for a Sexual Offences Prevention Order (SOPO) which would bring the offender back into registration requirements. However, there is a risk to this option that there may be instances where continuing notification would be appropriate but the circumstances of that individual would not meet the higher threshold required to obtain a SOPO. There is a further risk that this option may have the effect of placing increased pressure on police and other agency resources in view of a potential increase in applications for other risk management tools, including SOPOs.

Option 3: Police or Multi Agency Public Protection Arrangements (MAPPA) type review mechanism where offenders apply to be removed from the notification requirements

Following a fixed period of time subject to the notification requirements (15 years from the point of first notification for adults and 8 years for juveniles), an offender would be eligible to apply to their local police for a review of these requirements. This review would be completed on the basis of a range of factors, including any information that could be provided from other Responsible Authority and Duty to Co-operate agencies as defined within the Multi-Agency Public Protection Arrangements (MAPPA). Where, on the basis of the available information, the decision-making officer considers that notification should continue, the offender would be invited to submit any further evidence or information that has not previously been considered, that they would wish to be considered as part of the review process. This process would be subject to judicial oversight by way of judicial review. It is considered that this option carries a significant risk of further legal challenge.

Option 4: Police or Multi Agency Public Protection Arrangements (MAPPA) type review mechanism with a prescribed and limited right of appeal to the Magistrates' Court⁴.

As with Option 3, offenders would only become eligible to apply for a review of their indefinite notification requirements once they have spent a fixed period of time subject to the notification requirements (15 years from the point of first notification for adults and 8 years for juveniles). An application would be made to their local police force and the review completed on the basis of a range of factors, including any information that could be provided from other Responsible Authority and Duty to Co-operate agencies as defined within the MAPPA. Under this option there would be no opportunity for an offender to submit any further evidence or information – they would be expected to provide all relevant information within their initial application. There would be a prescribed right of appeal to the magistrates' courts against a decision by the police to continue an offender's notification requirements. In such cases the offender will be expected to meet the cost of bringing the appeal and it will be open to the magistrates' court to award costs against the offender in the event that the appeal is unsuccessful.

This option addresses concerns raised by the Joint Committee on Human Rights that an approach which did not have at least a prescribed avenue of appeal to an independent and impartial tribunal (i.e. the courts) would carry a significant risk of further legal challenge. This option retains the role of the police as the initial decision maker, introducing a review process which will be undertaken by the police in tandem with the other bodies acting under the Multi-Agency Public Protection Arrangements. Coupled with the availability of the right of appeal to the magistrates' court, this process accords with the Committee's recommendation and minimises the risk of further, potentially expensive, legal challenge.

Option 5: Court administered review mechanism where offenders apply to be removed from the notification requirements.

This option would involve a court (civil jurisdiction) administered review of an individual's indefinite notification requirements. The police would provide the information required to assess the level of risk the individual poses to the public, or any member of the public, with input from other Responsible Authority and Duty to Co-operate agencies as defined within the Multi-Agency Public Protection Arrangements (MAPPA), in line with the process outlined under option 3. This option would include a full merits right of appeal to the courts.

It is the Government's view that this option would be a prohibitively expensive and bureaucratic process, which would not provide a significantly more robust process than that which would be achieved by a process administered by the agencies which operate within the MAPPA framework (as outlined within option 3 or 4). This option, in our view, goes significantly beyond what is required to address the incompatibility identified by the Supreme Court.

E. Appraisal (Costs and Benefits)

Option 1: Do Nothing

COSTS

- There may be a risk of further Judicial Reviews and failing to act in responding to the judgment would leave the Government vulnerable to further claims for compensation including from offenders bringing cases direct to the Court in Strasbourg, which has the power to award compensation for the same human rights breaches that the Supreme Court found in this case.
- There may be a risk of inefficient allocation of Police resources since persons who have been sentenced to imprisonment for a term of 30 months or more in respect of an offence listed under Schedule 3 of the Sexual Offences Act 2003 would stay subject to notification requirements indefinitely, irrespective of the level of risk they pose.

BENEFITS

- Notification requirements would continue to be a risk management tool indefinitely for persons who have been sentenced to imprisonment for a term of 30 months or more in respect of an offence listed under Schedule 3 of the Sexual Offences Act 2003.

It has not been possible to quantify the cost of not remedying the declaration of incompatibility in respect of notification requirements for an indefinite period under Part 2 of the Sexual Offences Act 2003, the risk of further Judicial Reviews, or the possibility of compensation payment claims.

Furthermore, it has not been possible to quantify the benefit of continued risk management for an indefinite period of time through notification requirements because it is not possible to determine to what extent notification requirements impact reoffending rates. Using reconviction rates as a proxy for reoffending behaviour is not appropriate in this case: notification requirements may reduce reoffending while actually increasing reconvictions since they may have a positive impact on the level of detections.

Option 2: Automatic removal from the notification requirements after a fixed period of time

COSTS

- The increased risk of reoffending, and/or increased difficulty of detection, which would not be managed by an individual risk assessment mechanism.
- It is possible that applications for Sexual Offences Prevention Orders (SOPOs) and other risk management tools may increase as a means of continued risk management, since there will be no formal review mechanism assessing risk. Applications for SOPOs would be expected to be more resource intensive than a police led review as outlined in Option 3.

BENEFITS

- Under the assumption that there is no increase in the applications for alternative risk management tools, such as SOPOs, this may be a simple and less resource intensive option.

It has not been possible to quantify the unmanaged risk of reoffending inherent in this option because it is not possible to determine to what extent notification requirements impact reoffending rates. Using reconviction rates as a proxy for reoffending behaviour is not appropriate in this case: notification requirements may reduce reoffending while actually increasing reconvictions since they may have a positive impact on the level of detections.

Furthermore, it has not been possible to estimate the possible increases in applications of alternative risk management tools such as SOPOs, which have, therefore, not been quantified.

Option 3: Police or Multi Agency Public Protection Arrangements (MAPPA) type review mechanism where offenders apply to be removed from the notification requirements

Eligibility for review

An offender who is subject to indefinite notification requirements would be eligible to apply to the police for a review once they have completed a fixed period of time subject to those requirements (typically 15 years from the time of first notification following release from custody for adults). This period would be 8 years for an offender who is under the age of 18 on the relevant date. It is proposed that an offender who is the subject to a Sexual Offences Prevention Order (SOPO) would be required to discharge the SOPO before seeking a review of their indefinite notification.

Process

Following receipt of an application from an eligible offender, the police would be required to contact other Responsible Authority and relevant Duty to Co-operate agencies, as defined within the MAPPA, to request any relevant intelligence or information that should be considered as part of the review process.

The decision-making officer would complete a review based on any information received and a range of factors as outlined within the proposed legislation. It is proposed that this review would be completed within 6 weeks of the expiry of the period of time for information to be submitted from other agencies and that the outcome of the review would be communicated in person within this period. At this stage, the decision-making will involve other agencies within the MAPPA framework where the risk level or risk information dictates.

If the decision-making officer determines that an offender should no longer be subject to the notification requirements, this decision would be signed off by a senior officer of not less than superintendent rank and would be effective from the date the decision is served, in person, on the offender.

Should the decision-making officer determine that it is appropriate to continue notification, they would be required to advise the offender of their 'Intention to continue notification'. The Notice of 'Intention to continue notification' would have to include an explanation of the reasons for the decision and would have to invite the offender to submit any further evidence or information that has not previously been considered and that they wish to be considered as part of the review process, within 28 days of being served with the notice of 'Intention to continue notification'.

Upon expiry of the period of time provided for the offender to submit further representations, the decision-making officer and, where appropriate, other agencies involved, would have to review any further information provided and the final 'Order continuing notification' would be served upon the offender, in person, and within a further 6 week period. This decision would be authorised by a senior officer of not less than superintendent rank.

This process would not include a prescribed right of appeal. The decision of the police would be subject to the supervisory jurisdiction of the courts by virtue of the availability of an application for judicial review.

It is proposed that an offender would be entitled to seek a further review after an eight year period has expired from the date of the earlier decision to continue notification (and at eight year intervals thereafter should the review be unsuccessful). Where there are exceptional circumstances which would justify doing so, it would be open to the police to set a longer period of up to 15 years before the offender could seek another review.

COSTS

The costs associated with this option would be absorbed by the agencies to which they fall and would primarily be met by the police service.

Transitional costs

There would be one off transitional costs in terms of producing guidance and training. These costs would be incurred in the first year and would not exceed a maximum estimate of £50,000⁵.

Cost of a review

It is envisaged that, on average, a review would take up approximately 13 hours of police time as well as 6 hours of involvement from other agencies. On the basis of this, the average cost of a review is, therefore, estimated at £760⁶.

Estimated volumes eligible for a review

Estimated volumes of reviews have been modelled using sentencing data provided by the Ministry of Justice. Offenders sentenced to a custodial sentence of 30 months or more for a sexual offence (as defined under the Sexual Offences Act 2003) are currently subject to lifetime notification requirements. They would be eligible for a review of their notification requirements 15 years (8 years for juveniles) after their first notification, which is within 3 days of their release from custody.

In order to estimate the point at which offenders would be eligible for a review, it is assumed that, on average, offenders serve 60% of their sentence⁷. It is assumed that those sentenced to an indeterminate sentence (life and indeterminate sentence for public protection) serve approximately 9 years in custody⁸. Average sentence length served is assumed to be constant over time and equal for adults and juveniles, and male and female offenders.

The proportion of those subject to lifetime notification requirements who were juveniles at the point of sentencing has been estimated using data from the Police National Computer (PNC) (2000-2008). The proportion is assumed to be constant over time and across sentencing bands.

Notification requirements were introduced in 1997. Offenders who were in custody at this time were also added to the register and, if sentenced to a custodial sentence of 30 months or more, subject to lifetime notification requirements. The volume of offenders serving a custodial sentence of 30 months or more for a sexual offence in 1997 is approximated assuming that the volume sentenced annually pre-1997 was equal to those sentenced in 1997. As notification requirements were introduced in 1997, it is not possible, allowing for time served in prison and 15 years of notifications, for there to be a backlog or existing stock of registered sex offenders (RSOs) eligible for review. Those released in 1997 from a sentence of 30 months or more, and so added to ViSOR indefinitely would only be eligible for review in 2012.

⁵ These estimates are based on costs incurred developing similar guidance and training modules in the past.

⁶ These figures are based on hourly police costs estimated in 2008, which rely heavily on ASHE (Annual Survey of Hours and Earnings) and CIPFA (Chartered Institute of Public Finance and Accounting) data. The underlying data has not been updated, the hourly cost estimates have simply been updated to account for inflation using the Treasury GDP deflator series.

⁷ This is based on data published in the Offender Management Caseload Statistics (2008).

⁸ This is based on data published in the Offender Management Caseload Statistics (2008).

The maximum number of offenders eligible for a review of their notification requirements is estimated at approximately 1,200 annually on average. Details of the estimated maximum volumes, and associated costs, are summarised in table E.1 below⁹.

Year	Offenders Eligible for Review	Costs (£m)
0	1,201	0.9
1	1,201	0.9
2	1,202	0.9
3	1,244	0.9
4	1,207	1.0
5	1,217	0.9
6	1,229	0.9
7	1,236	0.9
8	1,204	1.0
9	1,287	1.0

Proportion of eligible offenders applying for a review or their notification requirements

Table E.1, above, illustrates the maximum number of offenders newly eligible for a review of their indefinite notification requirements each year once they have reached 15 years since their initial notification (8 years for juveniles). It is not possible to predict what proportion of those eligible for a review of their notification requirements would apply for a review. For the purpose of modelling volumes, and associated costs, several scenarios are illustrated below. It is assumed that offenders who do not apply for a review of their notification requirements in the first year in which they are eligible to do so continue to be eligible for a review in subsequent years.

% of eligible offenders who apply for a review	0%	25%	50%	75%	100%
Estimated average annual volume of reviews¹¹	0	900	1,100	1,200	1,200
Estimated average annual cost	£0.0m	£0.7m	£0.9m	£0.9	£0.9m
Estimated total cost (present value)	£0.0m	£5.7m	£7.2m	£7.8m	£8.1m

It is unlikely that none of the eligible offenders will apply to have their notification requirements reviewed. This scenario would be similar to do 'do nothing' option briefly outlined in section D in that none of the indefinite notification requirements would be reviewed.

¹⁰ The figures illustrated in Table E.2 include a sensitivity analysis around the volume of applications expected as it has not been possible to predict the proportion of offenders wishing to apply to have their notification requirements reviewed. As such, it has not been possible to calculate a best estimate, instead the lower and upper bounds are reported. It is assumed that each year, the proportion who do not apply to have their notification requirements reviewed remain eligible for the review the following year.

¹¹ Rounded to the nearest hundred.

The impact of changing the underlying assumption around the proportion of eligible offenders who may apply to have their notification requirements reviewed is illustrated in Table E.2 above. Given that offenders who do not choose to have their notification requirements reviewed in the first year that they are eligible to do so may apply for a review at a later stage, the cost estimates are not hugely volatile to this assumption.

Continuation / Discontinuation of notification requirements

Each review will assess the level of risk an offender poses on a case by case basis and this policy does not prescribe the risk assessment tool to be used in the review process. It is, therefore, not possible to predict the outcome of the reviews in terms of continuation of notification requirements. Since it has not been possible to estimate reliably the volume of offenders who will continue to be subject to notification requirements, it has not been possible to quantify the cost of those applying for subsequent reviews.

Caveats

Using sentencing data (1997-2008) in order to model the volume of offenders eligible for a review is not ideal. It is likely that there could be double counting of offenders who have been sentenced for a sexual offence more than once in this time period.

Sentencing statistics are provided by primary offence. Offenders may be sentenced for several offences, one of which made them subject to lifetime notification requirements but which may, possibly, not be the primary offence. These offenders would not be accounted for in the estimated volumes. Additionally, offenders who were not sentenced in England or Wales but who were added to the Violent and Sex Offender Register (ViSOR) as a consequence of a notification order will not be included in these volumes.

The proportion of offenders who are under the age of 18 at the point of sentencing is estimated using data from the PNC (2000-2008). The proportion is assumed to be constant over time and across sentencing bands.

There would be no costs imposed on an offender in seeking a review. It would be open to the offender to decide whether they would apply for review in person or by post. Where an offender is subject to a SOPO, that offender would be required to seek to discharge the SOPO, as provided for under section 108 of the Sexual Offences Act 2003, before seeking a review of their indefinite notification requirements. However, we are satisfied that funding the legal costs of discharging a SOPO is within scope of criminal legal aid and would be subject to the standard interests of justice test and means test. Each legal aid application would be considered on its own merit but in the light of this, we do not consider that this policy approach would be an unreasonable fetter on an offender's ability to seek review by the police which would raise European Convention on Human Rights (ECHR) incompatibility issues.

It has not been possible to assess the possible impact of ending notification requirements on re-offending rates and detection rates. The impact on re-offending and detections is, therefore, not quantified. Additional risks such as the potential increase in applications to discharge SOPOs which would fall to the Ministry of Justice and the possibility of Judicial Reviews have not been quantified.

BENEFITS

There are resource savings that could result from introducing a review mechanism for those subject to indefinite notification requirements. By enabling the police to discontinue notification in cases where it is determined, on the balance of probabilities and in the absence of any information that indicates a continuing risk of harm to the public, that it would be appropriate to do so, police resources may focus on those offenders who pose a higher and continuing risk. This will enable savings to be made in relation to police time in completing periodic notification, regular assessments, home visits and other management requirements.

The estimated benefits are based on MAPPA guidance (2009), which suggests that police officers should aim to visit registered sex offenders at their registered address at the following frequency:

Table E.3 Frequency of visit by police based on sex offenders risk
Risk	Per Year
Very High	12
High	4
Medium	2
Low	1

In addition, police are also required to review registered sex offender (RSO) cases every 4 months and update the record on ViSOR.

It has not been possible to estimate the proportion of sex offenders that may have their notification requirements discontinued. Therefore, the benefits have not been quantified.

Option 4: Police or Multi Agency Public Protection Arrangements (MAPPA) type review mechanism with a prescribed and limited right of appeal to the Magistrates' Court.

Eligibility for review

As with option 3, an offender who is subject to indefinite notification requirements would be eligible to apply to the police for a review once they have completed a fixed period of time subject to those requirements (typically 15 years from the time of first notification following release from custody for adults). This period would be 8 years for an offender who is under the age of 18 on the relevant date. It is proposed that an offender who is the subject of a Sexual Offences Prevention Order (SOPO) would be required to discharge the SOPO before seeking a review of their indefinite notification requirements.

Process

Following receipt of an application from an eligible offender, the police would be required to contact other Responsible Authority and relevant Duty to Co-operate agencies, as defined within the MAPPA, to request any relevant intelligence or information that should be considered as part of the review process. The offender would be expected to provide all relevant information to the review in their application.

The decision-making officer would complete a review based on any information received and a range of factors as outlined within the proposed legislation. It is proposed that this review would be completed within 6 weeks of the expiry of the period of time for information to be submitted from other agencies and that the outcome of the review would be communicated in person within this period. The decision will involve other agencies within the MAPPA framework where the risk level or risk information dictates.

If the decision-making officer determines that an offender should no longer be subject to the notification requirements, this decision would be signed off by a senior officer of not less than superintendent rank and would be effective from the date the decision is served, in person, on the offender.

Should the decision-making officer determine that it is appropriate to continue notification, they would be required to issue the offender an 'Order continuing notification' which would be served upon the offender, in person, and within a further 6 week period. This decision would be authorised by a senior officer of not less than superintendent rank.

This option would include a prescribed and limited right of appeal to the Magistrates' Court against the decision of the police to continue an offender's indefinite notification requirements. An avenue of appeal to the Magistrates' Court would engage section 64 of the Magistrates' Court Act, which empowers Magistrates to make an order for costs. Wherever possible, offenders would be expected to meet the cost of bringing an appeal to the Magistrates' Court and it will be open to the Magistrates' Court to award costs against the offender in the event that the appeal is unsuccessful.

These appeals will be a civil legal matter and will not be covered by either the civil or criminal legal aid schemes. This means that legal aid for offenders seeking to appeal the police's decision in the Magistrates' Courts will not be available, except in very exceptional circumstances.

It is proposed that an offender would be entitled to seek a further review after an eight year period has expired from the date of the earlier decision to continue notification (and at eight year intervals thereafter should the review be unsuccessful). Where there are exceptional circumstances which would justify doing so, it would be open to the police to set a longer period of up to 15 years before the offender could seek another review.

COSTS

The costs associated with this option would be absorbed by the agencies to which they fall and would represent opportunity rather than financial costs.

Transitional costs

There would be one-off transitional costs in terms of producing guidance and training. These costs would be incurred in the first year and would not exceed a maximum estimate of £50,000¹². There would also be one-off transition costs to the other agencies involved. However, it has not been possible to quantify this.

Cost of a review

It is envisaged that, on average, a review would take up approximately 9 hours of police time, including 3 hours of superintendent¹³ time as well as 6 hours of involvement from other agencies. On the basis of this, the average cost of a review is, therefore, estimated at £630¹⁴. This is lower than for option 3 as there is only a one stage review process carried out by a police or MAPPA type review process. Offenders then have the right to an appeal heard in the Magistrates' Court.

Estimated volumes eligible for a review

Estimated volumes of reviews have been modelled as for option 3, there is no change in this option as to how many offenders would be eligible. Maximum volumes are set out in table E.1 above. Table E.4 below summarises the estimated average annual volumes, average annual cost and total cost (present value) associated with different scenarios around the proportion of eligible offender apply for a review of their notification requirements.

% of eligible offenders who apply for a review	0%	25%	50%	75%	100%
Estimated average annual volume of reviews¹⁶	0	900	1,100	1,200	1,200
Estimated average annual cost	£0.0m	£0.6m	£0.7m	£0.7m	£0.8m
Estimated total cost (present value)	£0.0m	£5.6m	£7.0m	£7.5m	£7.7m

As with option 3, it is unlikely that none of the eligible offenders will apply to have their notification requirements reviewed. This scenario would be similar to the 'do nothing' option briefly outlined in section D in that none of the indefinite notification requirements would be reviewed.

¹² These estimates are based on costs incurred developing similar guidance and training modules in the past.

¹³ Including 6 hours of DC time and 3 hours of superintendent time.

¹⁴ These figures are based on hourly police costs estimated in 2008, which rely heavily on ASHE (Annual Survey of Hours and Earnings) and CIPFA (Chartered Institute of Public Finance and Accounting) data. The underlying data has not been updated, the hourly cost estimates have simply been updated to account for inflation using the Treasury GDP deflator series.

¹⁵ The figures illustrated in Table E.4 include a sensitivity analysis around the volume of applications expected as it has not been possible to predict the proportion of offenders wishing to apply to have their notification requirements reviewed. As such, it has not been possible to calculate a best estimate, instead the lower and upper bounds are reported. It is assumed that each year, the proportion who do not apply to have their notification requirements reviewed remain eligible for the review the following year.

¹⁶ Rounded to the nearest hundred.

The impact of changing the underlying assumption around the proportion of eligible offenders who may apply to have their notification requirements reviewed is illustrated in Table E.2 above. Given that offenders who do not choose to have their notification requirements reviewed in the first year that they are eligible to do so may apply for a review at a later stage, the cost estimates are not hugely volatile to this assumption.

Continuation / Discontinuation of notification requirements

Each review will assess the level of risk an offender poses on a case-by-case basis and this policy does not prescribe the risk assessment tool to be used in the review process. It is, therefore, not possible to predict the outcome of the reviews in terms of continuation of notification requirements. Since it has not been possible to reliably estimate the volume of offenders who will continue to be subject to notification requirements, it has not been possible to quantify the cost of those applying for subsequent reviews.

Right of appeal

Offenders who have their indefinite notification requirements continued after their review will have the right to appeal this decision to a Magistrates' Court. It is estimated that this will require the following resources:

- 4 hours of superintendent (police) time and 2 hours of police counsel time.
- 1 hour of court time required, on average¹⁷
- These appeals will be a civil legal matter and will not be covered by either the civil or criminal legal aid schemes. Funding would only be available in exceptional circumstances¹⁸.
- The individual wishing to appeal the police decision must pay court fees for a commencement of proceedings and for a contested appeal to go ahead.

Table E.5, below, sets out the unit costs for an appeal hearing together with the cost to each agency involved.

Magistrates' court	£1,250
Police time	£230
Police counsel	£470
Court costs	£550

In order to commence the majority of appeals, the offender would be required to pay court fees to offset the costs to HMCTS of the hearing. This is estimated to be £200 for commencement of the appeal, and a further £500 if the appeal is contested by the police. These fees will not be applicable in all cases, for example if the applicant is in receipt of a qualifying benefit and so is eligible for fee remissions. It has not been possible to estimate how many appeals of police decisions there would be, or how many of these would be contested. By virtue of powers contained within section 64 of the Magistrates' Courts Act 1980, Magistrates would have the power to make an order for costs.

It has not been possible to predict what proportion of offenders who seek a review will be unsuccessful and will wish to have their review decision appealed. As such, it has not been possible to estimate the total costs associated with the right of appeal or the total costs of this option. In addition to it not being possible to estimate the volume of appeals, it has not been possible to quantify all the costs. In the case that an appeal is successful there may be additional costs to the police if Magistrates chose to award costs against them.

The annual average cost of this option (police review and prescribed and limited right of appeal to the Magistrates' Court) will be between £0.0m and £0.8m. It has not been possible to calculate a best estimate.

Caveats

¹⁷ This may vary depending on the complexity of the case and the evidence provided but 1 hour is the best estimate.

¹⁸ Where not providing legal aid would breach the individual's rights to legal aid under the ECHR (e.g. Article 6)

These would be the same as for Option 3.

BENEFITS

- Providing a thorough review process, which provides a method of managing risk, as well as a right of appeal.

The benefits of this option are expected to be similar to those quantified in Option 3. Equally, it has not been possible to quantify these.

Option 5: Court administered review mechanism where offenders apply to be removed from the notification requirements.

COSTS

- Police resources involved in supplying relevant information required to conduct a risk assessment, as well as involvement from other Responsible Authority and Duty to Co-operate agencies as defined within the Multi-Agency Public Protection Arrangements (MAPPA).
- Court costs involved in administering the review.
- These appeals will be a civil legal matter and will not be covered by either the civil or criminal legal aid schemes. Funding would only be available in exceptional circumstances¹⁹.
- Training will need to be provided to police officers and other agencies required to provide information relevant for the assessment of risk in the review.
- Additionally, training may be required for magistrates in how to conduct a review of notification requirements.

The cost of this option is estimate at an average £0m - £2.6m. The Net Benefit (present value) over 10 years is estimated to be between -£0.0 and -£22.5m. These estimates are based on the following assumptions:

Resources

- Providing information for an assessment of risk requiring approximately 6 hours of police time²⁰ as well as 6hrs of involvement from other agencies.
- A review of an individual's notification requirements taking between one and five hours in a magistrates court.

Volumes

- The volume of offenders eligible for a review of their notification requirements has been estimated using the method described in Option 3 above.
- It has not been possible to predict what proportion of those offenders who seek a review are successful and have their notification requirements discontinued. Similarly, it has not been possible to predict what proportion of applicants will be unsuccessful, and what proportion of those will appeal their review decision.

Table E.6, below, summarises the estimated average annual volumes, average annual cost, and total cost (present value) associated with the different scenarios around the proportion of eligible offenders applying for a review of their notification requirements. As stated above, it has not been possible to predict what proportion of offenders who seek a review will be successful and what proportion will wish to have their review decision appealed. It is possible for an offender to appeal the review hearing decision, which would take place in a crown court. Due to the difficulties in estimating the proportion of offenders who would appeal, it has not been possible to quantify the annual cost of appeals.

¹⁹ Where not providing legal aid would breach the individual's rights to legal aid under the ECHR (e.g. Article 6)

% of eligible offenders who apply for a review	0%	25%	50%	75%	100%
Estimated average annual volume of reviews²²	0	900	1,100	1,200	1,200
Estimated average annual cost of reviews²³	£0.0m	£2.0 m	£2.5m	£2.7m	£2.7m
Estimated total cost (present value)	£0.0m	£16.8m	£21.4m	£23.1m	£24.0m

It is unlikely that none of the eligible offenders will apply to have their notification requirements reviewed. This scenario would be similar to do ‘do nothing’ option briefly outlined in section D in that none of the indefinite notification requirements would be reviewed. These costs will predominantly fall to HMCTS.

BENEFITS

- Providing a thorough review process, which provides a method of managing risk, as well as a right of appeal.

The benefits of this option are expected to be similar to those quantified in Option 3. Equally, it has not been possible to quantify these.

One-in, One-Out

It is not envisaged that the recommended policy option (option 4) will have any impact on business. Therefore, no burden reduction is required.

F. Risks

Reviewing indefinite notification requirements of registered sex offenders under section 82 of the Sexual Offences Act 2003 is a new intervention which is required in the light of the Supreme Court declaration of Article 8 incompatibility in the case of R v F & Thompson. As such, there are a number of estimates made within this assessment. There are the following unknowns in relation to this policy:

- The actual volumes of applications for review;
- The impact of the review mechanism on subsequent applications for civil Orders and applications for the discharge of SOPOs²⁴;
- The volumes of offenders whose indefinite notification requirements will be discontinued as a result of the review process;
- The potential impact of ending notification requirements on re-offending rates and detection rates.
- The actual costs and savings that will result.

As described in section E, it has not been possible to estimate how many eligible registered sex offenders will apply for a review of their indefinite notification requirements or the outcomes of any reviews that do happen. As such it has not been possible to estimate the costs of any appeals that ²¹ The figures illustrated in Table E.6 include a sensitivity analysis around the volume of applications expected as it has not been possible to predict the proportion of offenders wishing to apply to have their notification requirements reviewed. As such, it has not been possible to calculate a best estimate, instead the lower and upper bounds are reported. It is assumed that each year, the proportion who do not apply to have their notification requirements reviewed remain eligible for the review the following year.

²² Rounded to the nearest hundred

²³ This is calculated assuming 3 hours of court time is required. This is the best estimate of the unit cost.

may result. To give an example of potential impacts of implementing the preferred option (option 4), the following costs would occur if 10 per cent of eligible offenders applied for a review, were unsuccessful and chose to appeal the decision, assuming no court costs are recovered through court fees.

	Appeal costs (£m)
Volumes	120
- Police	£0.08
- HMCTS	£0.07
Total	£0.1

It is envisaged that the preferred policy outlined here will enable costs to be kept to a minimum. We will work with the police and agencies within MAPPA to develop clear guidance and training to ensure that processes are aligned nationally and the review process is applied fairly and consistently across England and Wales.

A number of studies have been considered in the development of this policy which analyse reconviction rates of convicted sex offenders over a follow-up period of 20-25 years. There is no evidence that a point can be reached at which a sex offender presents no risk of re-offending. Approximately a quarter of the previously convicted offenders were reconvicted for a sexual offence within this time period, the majority (over 80%) of whom were reconvicted within 10 years. This proportion increases to a third if all violent offences are considered rather than just sexual offences.

The three studies considered suggest that the risk of reconviction for a sexual offence persists throughout the follow-up period. The risk of reconviction after ten years decreases to approximately three per cent for any sexual offence and five per cent for any violent and sexual offence. It is noted that the risk of reconviction is slightly lower for those convicted of a less serious sexual offence in the first instance.

It is considered that this policy is a fair and proportionate response to the Supreme Court judgment which found the lack of any prospect for review to be incompatible with Article 8 of the ECHR, and that it strikes an appropriate balance between individual rights and public safety. In view of the continuing presence of risk following release from custody, the Government does not consider that it would be appropriate to introduce a mechanism which would consist of automatic removal from the Sex Offender register after a fixed period of time (option 2), which would include no individual assessment of risk before an offender's notification requirements would cease.

G. Enforcement

Enforcement of this policy will be by the police and other Responsible Authority and Duty to Co-operate agencies as defined within the Multi-Agency Public Protection Arrangements (MAPPA), with oversight from the Home Office.

Option 4 is the preferred option. The Government recommends that the draft remedial Order is approved to introduce a review mechanism of the indefinite notification requirements of registered sex offenders, which will remedy the Article 8 incompatibility of Part 2 of the Sexual Offences Act 2003, as outlined within option 4.

I. Implementation

The Government is seeking to implement these changes through a non-urgent remedial Order made under section 10(2) of the Human Rights Act 1998. It is envisaged that subject to parliamentary business, the review mechanism will be in force across England and Wales in Summer 2012. Detailed practitioner guidance will be developed and training will be provided to the police and other agencies involved in the review process.

Although it is envisaged that there will be some individuals who will be eligible to apply for review immediately (i.e. those who were under the age of 18 on the date of their initial notification), the policy will not become effective for adults until summer 2012, 15 years after the notification requirements originally came into force (on 1st September 1997).

J. Monitoring and Evaluation

The effectiveness of the new scheme will be monitored on an ongoing basis by the Home Office and information relevant to the review process will be stored on ViSOR.

It is envisaged that this policy will achieve the objective of remedying the Supreme Court declaration of Article 8 incompatibility in relation to Part 2 of the Sexual Offences Act 2003. There will be no formal evaluation of this policy.

K. Feedback

The Home Office has regular contact with the police and NOMS and attends regular meetings of the ACPO Public Protection Working Group. Feedback on how the review mechanism is working can be received and discussed through these channels.

Equality Impact Assessment

Background

The Government is required to take steps to remedy the declaration of incompatibility made by the Supreme Court in the case of R (on the application of F and Angus Aubrey Thompson) v Secretary of State for the Home Department [2010] UKSC 17, in relation to the indefinite notification requirements under section 82(1) of the Sexual Offences Act 2003. It was the view of the Supreme Court that 'there must be some circumstances in which an appropriate tribunal could reliably conclude that the risk of an individual carrying out a further sexual offence can be discounted to the extent that continuance of notification requirements is unjustified'.

In the light of this declaration of incompatibility, the Government is seeking to introduce a review mechanism whereby an offender who has been made subject to the notification requirements for an indefinite period may seek a review of those requirements after a fixed period of time in the community. This review will be completed by the police, with input from other Responsible Authority and Duty to Co-operate agencies as defined within the Multi Agency Public Protection Arrangements (MAPPA).

Groups affected by this change in policy

There are two main categories of individuals / groups which may be affected by this new policy; perpetrators and victims of the sexual offences which make an individual subject to the notification requirements for an indefinite period. It is important that both are considered as part of the EIA.

This policy will apply only to registered sex offenders who have been made subject to the notification requirements for an indefinite period under Part 2 of the Sexual Offences Act 2003. This will include a person who, in respect of an offence listed under Schedule 3 of the Act, is or has been sentenced to imprisonment for life or for a term of 30 months or more. Where a person who, in respect of the offence or finding, is or has been admitted to hospital subject to a restriction order, an indefinite period of notification beginning with that date will also apply.

Sex offenders are not a homogenous group. However, there are various ways in which we can describe the demographic characteristics of offender populations. Most data will either examine the characteristics of sub groups of individuals who have been convicted of offences; or alternatively they may consider sub groups (e.g. covering only imprisoned offenders). The general sex offender population (ie anyone convicted of a sex offence) and the imprisoned sex offender populations are of course different in their composition. The latter will be influenced by the presence of offenders serving longer sentences for more serious offences.

Age

An analysis of the criminal careers of offenders convicted of serious sexual assault (Soothill et al 2002) analysed the age and prior offending characteristics of 1,057 offenders in England and Wales. The average of sex offenders (including juveniles) was under 29 years and the average age at first conviction was 21 years; less than 2 per cent of this sample of offenders was under the age of 16. Because of the nature of the sampling (offenders over the age of 45 were excluded from the analysis), the average figures understate the average age of offenders.

Ethnic background

Data provided by the HM Prison Service on the ethnic background of imprisoned male sex offenders in England and Wales indicate that 82 per cent are white; 10 per cent are Black / Black British; 6 per cent are Asian / Asian British; and 2 per cent are other / mixed. Ethnicity is not recorded for 0.4 per cent of the population (data cited in Cowburn, M, Lavis, V. and Walker T (2008) 'Black and minority ethnic sex offenders', Prison Service Journal, 178, pp44-49. A simple comparison against self reported ethnic background of the population as a whole (from the Census) would suggest that both Black/Black British and Asian/Asian British groups are over represented in the imprisoned sex offender population. Cowburn et al also indicate that BME sex offenders are markedly over represented in the younger age groups of imprisoned sex offenders.

Victim safety, preventing re-victimisation and avoiding the creation of new victims is fundamental to the police and other MAPPA agencies' public protection role. A range of factors will be taken into account in the review decision, including the seriousness of the offence which made offender subject to indefinite notification and the age of the victim and difference in age between victim and offender at time the offence was committed. Additionally, officials have worked closely with the Victim Policy Team in NOMS who have responsibility for the Victim Contact Scheme, which informs victims of key stages in an offender's sentence. Guidance for Victim Liaison Officers (VLOs) will be updated to reflect that at the time of the exit interview from this scheme, victims should be advised of the date at which the relevant offender will become eligible to seek a review and should be advised of the options open to them (i.e to submit representations to the police or notify the police of any concerning behaviour). The draft order provides that where a victim gives any submission or evidence to the police, this will be considered within the review. Officials will ensure that both VLO guidance and practitioner guidance on administering the review mechanism is clear as to engagement with victims, where appropriate.

There will be a robust review and assessment of the level of continuing risk posed by the individual in giving consideration to whether it would be appropriate to discontinue the individual's indefinite notification requirements. Where it is determined that an offender continues to pose a risk they will remain subject to the notification requirements and will do so for life, if necessary. It is considered that the preferred policy outlined in the main body of this impact assessment fully complies with the Supreme Court judgment which found the lack of any prospect for review to be incompatible with Article 8 of the ECHR, and strikes an appropriate balance between individual rights and public safety.

Consultation

There has been no formal public consultation process on the draft remedial Order. As the Home Office is seeking to amend the current law by way of a (non-urgent) remedial Order made under section 10(2) of the Human Rights Act 1998, the Order is subject to Parliamentary scrutiny. The proposal for the draft remedial Order was laid before both Houses for an initial 60 day period, during which time Members and Lords were able to submit representations. The Joint Committee on Human Rights issued their report on the proposal for the draft Order on 13th October 2011. Following careful consideration of the representations received, as prescribed by the non-urgent remedial Order process (under Section 10 of the Human Rights Act 1998), the Government has now laid the draft Sexual Offences Act 2003 (Remedial) Order 2012 before Parliament. The Order will only be made and brought into effect once it is approved by both Houses.

The Home Office has consulted closely with key partners, including the Association of Chief Police Officers (ACPO) and the National Offender Management Service (NOMS), before finalising the draft Remedial Order and has ensured that colleagues across Government and the devolved administrations with a key interest were consulted on the proposed legislative changes and in particular whether the changes proposed would have any unintended consequences. The Home Office will continue to engage with interested parties as the draft remedial Order is progressed through Parliament.

Assessment

In the development of this policy the Home Office has given due consideration to the impact it will have on different groups and has given particular consideration to the potential impact, both positive and negative, of the policy in terms of:

- Race
- Disability
- Gender
- Gender Identity
- Religion, belief and non-belief
- Sexual orientation
- Age

Race: From the available evidence, data relating to offender populations is outlined above. The proposed policy will be equally accessible to all offenders who are subject to the notification requirements for an indefinite period once they have completed qualifying period. It is not envisaged that the policy will disproportionately affect any particular ethnic group.

Disability: The proposals for the review mechanism include provision for the application to be made in writing or in person. Detailed practitioner guidance will be developed which, subject to the proposals being successfully progressed through Parliament, will be available from Summer / Autumn 2012. This guidance will seek to ensure that the review process is fully accessible to all eligible offenders.

Gender: This policy will apply equally to both males and females who have been made subject to the notification requirements under section 82(1) of the Sexual Offences Act 2003 for an indefinite period. It is acknowledged that there are a number of approved assessment tools which are used by the agencies that make up the Responsible Authority (police, prisons, probation) under the Multi Agency Public Protection Arrangements to conduct an assessment of the risk posed by the relevant sex offender, and that different tools are used in the assessment of risk of males and females. The Home Office will be working with key partners and experts to develop practitioner guidance and the detail of the basis for the review decision.

‘Ultimately, formal risk assessments inform professional judgements and underpin defensible decision-making. The key principle for MAPPA agencies is that risk assessments, undertaken by individuals within agencies, should be based on the use of tools and procedures currently approved for use within that agency. Agency protocols and procedures must be carefully adhered to and current guidance on the use of the respective tools must be followed’ [section 7.9 MAPPA Guidance, version 3.0, 2009]. This new policy will operate within the existing MAPPA framework.

Gender Identity: It is not considered that this policy highlights any issues specific to gender identity.

Religion / Belief and non-belief: It is not considered that this policy highlights any issues specific to religion or belief.

Sexual Orientation: It is not considered that this policy highlights any issues specific to sexual orientation.

Age: Under these proposals, an offender (who is 18 years or over on the date of their Initial Notification) would become eligible to apply for a review 15 years after the date of their initial notification following their release from custody. This period would exclude any circumstances where an offender is required to notify before their custodial sentence for the qualifying offence commences (i.e. when an offender is bailed before sentencing). For an offender who was under the age of 18 on the date of their Initial Notification, that offender would become eligible to apply for a review 8 years from the date of making their initial notification following release from custody. The difference in review periods is in line with the fixed notification periods within section 82(1) of the Sexual Offences Act 2003 (for offences of less than 30 months) where periods are halved where a person is under 18 on the date of their conviction or finding.

As noted above, detailed practitioner guidance will be developed and training will be provided to the police and other agencies involved in the review process. It is envisaged that this would detail all necessary considerations in completing a review, details of the process and what is required at each stage, and further detail on the factors which form the basis for the review decision. This will ensure that frontline professionals identify and respond appropriately and consistently to individuals seeking a review and that the review process is applied consistently and fairly across England and Wales.

Furthermore, agencies operating within the MAPPA framework are committed to equal access to services for all groups, particularly in relation to race, gender, age, religious belief, sexuality, sexual orientation and disability. In undertaking its work, MAPPA agencies will be sensitive and responsive to people’s differences and needs and will integrate this understanding into the delivery of their functions to ensure that nobody is disadvantaged as a result of their belonging to a specific social group. This commitment is outlined within section 1.5 of the MAPPA Guidance, version 3.0, 2009.

It is the Government’s view that the draft Remedial Order fully remedies the legislative incompatibility found in relation to Part 2 of the Sexual Offences Act 2003 and strikes an appropriate balance between individual rights and public safety and it is not considered that any particular group will be disproportionately affected by the proposed policy.

Ancillary

It is considered that, where an offender is subject to a Sexual Offences Prevention Order (SOPO), it would be necessary for that offender to discharge the Order, as provided for under section 108 of the Sexual Offences Act 2003, before they would be eligible to seek a review of their indefinite notification requirements. The basis for this policy proposal is that it would not be practical to require police forces to conduct a review where the outcome could not bring to an end an individual's indefinite notification requirements whilst that individual remains subject to the SOPO, for which notification is an automatic consequence. If an offender is successful in discharging their SOPO on application to a Magistrates' Court, they could then seek a review of their indefinite notification requirements, subject to meeting the other eligibility requirements.

In adopting this approach we are satisfied that funding the legal costs of discharging a SOPO is within scope of criminal legal aid and would be subject to the standard interests of justice test and means test. Each legal aid application would be considered on its own merit but in the light of the above, we do not consider that this policy approach would be an unreasonable fetter on their ability to seek review by the police which would raise ECHR incompatibility issues.

Monitoring

Information on individuals subject to notification requirements for an indefinite period and details of any application for a review will be stored on ViSOR.

The Home Office will continue to engage with interested parties as the proposal for the draft remedial Order is progressed through Parliament. We will review this EIA alongside development of the practitioner guidance.

2 Economic Impacts

Competition Assessment

2.1 We do not anticipate any competition impacts as a result of these proposals.

Small Firms Impact Test

2.2 We do not anticipate any small firms impacts as a result of these proposals.

3 Environmental Impacts

Greenhouse gas impacts

3.1 We do not anticipate any greenhouse gas impacts as a result of these proposals.

Wider Environmental Issues

3.2 We do not anticipate any environmental impacts as a result of these proposals.

4 Social Impacts

Health and Well-being

4.1 We do not anticipate any direct health impact from the proposals.

Human Rights

4.2 It is considered that this policy will remedy the declaration of incompatibility that was made by the Supreme Court in the case of R (on the application of F and Angus Aubrey Thompson) v Secretary of State for the Home Department [2010] UKSC 17, in relation to Part 2 of the Sexual Offences Act 2003.

Justice

4.3 This policy does not create any new offence or criminal penalty. However, it is acknowledged that the policy may have a bearing on applications to discharge Sexual Offences Prevention Orders (provided for under section 108 of the Sexual Offences Act 2003). Funding the legal costs of discharging a SOPO is within scope of criminal legal aid and would be subject to the standard interests of justice test and means test. Each legal aid application would be considered on its own merit. It is also acknowledged that Judicial Review is a risk with this policy approach and that this may have a bearing on legal aid costs. Under the preferred option (option 4), appeals to the Magistrates' Courts from an initial police decision to continue an individual's notification requirements will be a civil legal matter and will not be covered by the civil or criminal legal aid schemes. This means that legal aid for offenders seeking to appeal the police's decision in the Magistrates' Courts will not be available, except in exceptional circumstances. The Ministry of Justice has been consulted and included in the development of this policy.

Rural Proofing

4.2 We do not anticipate any specific or different impact in rural areas as a result of these proposals.

5 Sustainability

Sustainable Development

5.1 These proposals are consistent with the principles of sustainable development.
