CC CLEARS ARCELOR ACQUISITION

The Competition Commission (CC) has formally cleared the acquisition by Arcelor SA of the UK hot rolled steel sheet piling business of Corus Group plc.

This confirms the conclusion made in the provisional findings report, which was published in January. In its final report published today, the CC's inquiry group has concluded (by a majority of four to one) that the acquisition may not be expected to lead to a substantial lessening of competition.

Sheet piling is used in the construction industry as a retaining structure acting as a barrier to earth or water.

Chairman of the Inquiry Group, Peter Freeman commented:

By this deal Arcelor has bought the commercial operations of the hot rolled steel sheet business of Corus, that is the goodwill, know-how and some staff. Corus's heavy section mill at Scunthorpe was not included in the transfer, and we are satisfied that Corus would have closed this mill, and withdrawn from this loss-making business in any event, even if the Arcelor deal had not happened.

Any reduction of competition, and we accept that there may be some, at least in the short term, stems from Corus's withdrawal rather than the deal with Arcelor; we have accordingly concluded that the merger itself will not lead to a substantial lessening of competition.

One member dissents from this majority view.
