

recognition of the limited capacity of hosts to host over the long term, rather than an overt desire to live in a camp (McDowell, 2008, p.5, p.39). However despite reaching 35 per cent in informal camps in 2008, by 2011 this had dropped to 17 per cent, with the remainder still staying with host families or sleeping rough in the forest (IDMC, 2011, p.5).

The 2010 Human Rights Watch Report found that for many IDPs the scale and longevity of displacement means they have nowhere else to go and therefore local integration into their host community is their only option (Simpson, 2010, p.63).
