

Appendix 2 – stakeholder groups identified as low influence and low importance.

Table 1 Stakeholder groups identified by collaborators as having low influence and low importance with respect to the implementation of adaptive learning in the pilot studies.

Organisations to promote
Rice and Aquaculture Research Organisation	Have an interest in the rice-fish system that is the focus of the approach in West Bengal
Government of India	Central government based in New Delhi
DFID Southeast Asia country office	Regional office in Bangkok
DFID India country office	Regional office in New Delhi
University of Sydney	Home to the Australian Mekong Centre and has considerable research interest in aquatic resources management in the Mekong basin
Imperial College, London	University with considerable research interest in aquatic resources management in the Mekong basin.
NGOs in India	For example the Astha Foundation and Nyrada, that work in the villages in West Bengal and Karnataka that have been selected as sites for the implementation of the approach.
Implementing agencies
Bangalore Water, Sewage and Sanitation Board	Manage the water resources in Thippagundahalli reservoir in Karnataka, the site selected by CIFRI where the approach is to be implemented.
Capacity building
NGOs in India	For example the Astha Foundation and Nyrada, that work in the villages in West Bengal and Karnataka that have been selected as sites for the implementation of the approach.
Fisheries Department, West Bengal	Responsible for the management of marine and freshwater fisheries in the state of West Bengal
Farm Science Club	Farmer organisations in the villages in West Bengal that promote innovation in farming
Target groups (to be identified further)
Villagers in Karnataka	Community members from the villages that surround Thippagundahalli reservoir.
Villagers in West Bengal	Community members from the villages in West Bengal in which the approach is to be implemented.
Population of Bangalore	People that depend upon the reservoir for fresh water.
Thippagundahalli nature club	Club with interests in watching birds that use the reservoir
Department of Forestry, Karnataka	Manage the forestry resources around Thippagundahalli reservoir.