

To Justeat.hungryhouse@cma.gsi.gov.uk
Date 13 October 2017
From Company A
Subject Just Eat/Hungryhouse Merger: Response to Provisional Findings Report

Just heard Just Eat is a step further is completing taking over Hungry House.

It's been reported CMA thinks Hungryhouse is not very big and not a competitor to Just Eat. CMA feels Just Eat should be allowed to swallow up its competitor. It should be considered why would Just Eat want to buy up Hungryhouse? To grow it's customer base? Surely not, Hungryhouse is far too small.

Could it be another company may take over Hungryhouse and actually offer an alternative to Just Eat on its own level?

As for the reported CMA argument that UberEat and Deliveroo are more likely to offer Just Eat competition. In my opinion, this is not correct, certainly not in the short term, both those businesses, cover very limited areas across the UK. Deliveroo will only work with very high end businesses in tiny areas, mostly based in and around built up areas (city centres).

Neither are true competitors to Just Eat and by the time they get their acts together, Just Eat will be far bigger and more experienced in influencing businesses like mine, that we will not dare move to anyone else.

CMA is going to assist Just Eat to screw down mini mini micro businesses like mine for the sole benefit of Just Eat.