Local Government

Under the above code of practice, issued by the department for communities and local government in march 2011, government groups are advised as to how they should conduct themselves with regard to publicity.

One of the principles highlighted in the code of practice is that local government associations should be both objective and even-handed in the publicity they issue.

Within the “objectivity” section it specifically states that:

15. Local authorities should ensure that publicity relating to policies and proposals from central government is balanced and factually accurate. Such publicity may set out the local authority's views and reasons for holding those views, but should avoid anything likely to be perceived by readers as constituting a political statement, or being a commentary on contentious areas of public policy.

16. Any publicity describing the council's policies and aims should be as objective as possible, concentrating on the facts or explanation or both. Local authorities should not use public funds to mount publicity campaigns whose primary purpose is to persuade the public to hold a particular view on a question of policy. It is acceptable for local authority publicity to correct erroneous material which has been published by other parties, despite the fact that the material being corrected may have been published with the intention of influencing the public's opinions about the policies of the authority. Such publicity should seek to explain the facts in an objective manner.

Within the “even-handedness” section specifically states that

19. Where local authority publicity addresses matters of political controversy it should seek to present the different positions in relation to the issue in question in a fair manner.

It is noted that within the section “equality and diversity” it does state

31. Publicity by local authorities may seek to influence (in accordance with the relevant law and in a way which they consider positive) the attitudes of local people or public behaviour in relation to matters of health, safety, crime prevention, race relations, equality, diversity and community issues.

This however cannot apply to the consultation on plain packaging since the Government has stated that the purpose of the consultation (Andrew Lansley Ministerial statement 15th December 2011) is to understand whether there is evidence to demonstrate that the plain packaging of tobacco products would have an additional benefit, over and above existing tobacco control initiatives

Since the impact of plain packaging of tobacco is unknown section 31 cannot apply at this stage of the public consultation.

And indeed under the section “care during periods of heightened sensitivity” it clearly states

35. In general, local authorities should not issue any publicity which seeks to influence voters. However this general principle is subject to any statutory provision which authorises expenditure being incurred on the publication of material designed to influence the public as to whether to support or oppose a question put at a referendum. It is acceptable to publish material relating to the subject matter of a referendum, for example to correct any factual inaccuracies which have appeared in publicity produced by third parties, so long as this is even-handed and objective and does not support or oppose any of the options which are the subject of the vote.

Against that code we ask you to consider a selection of the statements made by local government organisations. As a small campaigning organisation we have not been able to collate all such statements made by local government associations, and indeed more examples arrive daily, but is an indication of current actions of local government across the country.

Here is a selection of NHS and DOH funded organisations urging public support of plain packaging and the “plainpacksprotect” campaign.

Pledge your support – plain packaging of tobacco products Posted by: mattrush | 14/02/2012

The Government is due to launch a public consultation in Spring 2012 on whether the UK should adopt the plain packaging of tobacco products. To make it easy for us to show our support the National Smokefree Action Coalition have launched a new website: www.plainpacksprotect.co.uk

Q: Why support plain packaging?

A: To make packs less attractive to our children: Every year, another 340,000 children in the UK are tempted to try smoking. And research has shown that they are more likely to be attracted by designed tobacco packs, than by plain packs. With regulation in place to restrict television, radio and other advertising, packaging is becoming more and more important to the tobacco industry to help sell their products. Shiny holograms, pretty pastel colours and wrappers are just some of the eye-catching pack designs available, and there is building evidence to suggest that these packs can attract and mislead children.

To make a real difference we need as many people to show their support for this campaign by clicking on the following link: www.plainpacksprotect.co.uk

Lynsey Bowker Tobacco Control Manager NHS Sheffield, Public Health Directorate, 722 Prince of Wales Road, Darnall, Sheffield, S9 4EU. Plain packs protect our children. Pledge your support today: www.plainpacksprotect.co.uk

Plain packs steer kids away from cigs

Local politicians and health experts are throwing their weight behind the campaign for tobacco to be sold in plain packaging. They believe the move will cut sales and reduce the number of children attracted to a lethal habit at a young age. Every year, an estimated 340,000 children in the UK are tempted to try smoking, with research showing they are more likely to be attracted by designed rather than plain packaging.

How plain packaging works:

- Reduced appeal to young people - studies have shown plain packaging is less attractive to young people than branded cigarettes
- Despite an industry ban on cigarettes being labelled 'mild' or 'low tar', many smokers still assume white or silver packets contain cigarettes that are less harmful
- More prominent health warnings

The government wants to hear from schools, youth clubs and other organisations with an interest in cutting smoking rates. Anyone wishing to support the drive for plain packaging can contact Public Health Officer Rachel McIvenna at rachel_mclivenna@middlesbrough.gov.uk for more details. Members of the public can also support this campaign by promoting it in their local area and encouraging people to sign up at www.freshns.com

The UK Government has committed to carrying out a public consultation on plain packaging of tobacco products, recently adopted by the Australian government, as there is good evidence that plain packs are less attractive, particularly to young people. In addition, health warnings stand out more and reduce the ability of the packaging to mislead consumers about the harms of smoking.

Every year, another 340,000 children in the UK are tempted to try smoking and evidence suggests that they are more likely to be attracted by designed tobacco packs, than by plain packs. Keeping our community healthier

Set a quit date to help stop smoking

Everyone has their own reason for wanting to give up smoking. Most people make several attempts before they stop for good. 14 March is National No Smoking Day and using this time of year to quit can provide extra motivation and encouragement because you know that you won't be alone.

It is important to set a quit date because it provides a starting point. Some people would like to stop smoking but often 'don't get round to it' or find it very hard to begin – the quit day is a definite start to the withdrawal process.

Rushma Patel, a health improvement specialist at NHS Luton, said: "Giving up smoking is a time when people often feel very alone. One of the benefits of approaching Luton Stop Smoking Service is that you have a trained specialist or advisor behind you, giving advice and supporting you throughout. You can contact them on their freephone number 0800 013 0845."

Susan Roberts gave up smoking last year following a health scare. "I had been ill for a while and the doctor suggested a chest x-ray; when the results came back abnormal I really panicked. I was lucky and didn't have anything too serious but the thought that I might be the incentive I needed to finally give up."

"I went to visit my doctor who referred me to the Luton Stop Smoking Service. The support I have received has been amazing and I really would encourage anyone to give it a go. Set a quit date and let everyone know when it is, then they can encourage you and help take your mind off cigarettes and gradually, one small step at a time, you too can kick the habit."

Still on the subject of smoking,

Hedge your support for the Plain Packs Protect campaign the NHS and the Council in Luton really need your help and support with this spring's national consultation on legislation that could force tobacco companies to package cigarettes in plain packs. It's really important to protect our children from the effects of smoking and you can find out more about the 'Plain Packs Protect' campaign at www.plainpacksprotect.co.uk. Please sign up and pledge your support. Thank you!

Pupils still cycling in winter!

In just two weeks in December, Luton pupils cycled 1,667 miles on their way to school and back home – further than the equivalent distance from Luton to Lapland!

The challenge was set by 'Cycle Santa' in a scheme promoted by the Council and UK charity Gustrans, and taken up by students at Luton's ten 'Bike it' schools that support healthy and sustainable transport.

Providing it's not icy, cycling can still be a great way to get to school in winter – just make sure you have lights that work, wear reflective clothing and remember to pack some waterproofs!

Taking part were pupils from Bramingham Primary, Farley Junior, Foxlell Junior, Hillborough Junior, Icknield Primary, Leagrave Primary, Ramridge Primary, Sacred Heart Primary, Wardean Hill Juniors and Wigmore Primary schools.

Support Plain Packs: Protect our Children

Every year, another 340,000 children in the UK are tempted to try smoking, and around 150,000 11-15 year olds are regular smokers. Research has shown children are more likely to be attracted by highly designed tobacco packs than by plain packs. Supermarket shelves are crammed full of enticing and sophisticated designs, from brightly coloured packs that look like crayon boxes, to 'slims', suggesting an image of a more elegant lifestyle.

The Australian government is introducing plain packaging for cigarettes later this year. The UK government is considering the same action but this will only happen if they believe they have public support. South Gloucestershire Council is supporting the campaign for plain packaging for cigarettes. Please help support it too. It contains a zebra crossing mat, belisha beacons, a school crossing patrol outfit

National Child Measurement Programme 2010-2011

The National Child Measurement Programme (NCMP) results for the school year 2010-2011 were published in December 2011.

Key findings nationally

- In reception, over a fifth (22.6%) of the children measured were either overweight or obese. In year 6, this rate was one in three (33.4%).
- The percentage of obese children in year 6 (19.0%) was double that in reception (9.4%)
- As in previous years, a link existed between deprivation and obesity prevalence in each age group.

Noticeboard
bulletin

Plain Packs Campaign

The Government plan to publish a consultation on the packaging of tobacco products in spring 2012. They want evidence that the plain packaging of tobacco products would have an additional health benefit, over and above existing tobacco control initiatives.

In January Smokefree South West launched a campaign in collaboration with SW PCT Stop Smoking Services, including North Somerset, to raise awareness of the dangers of glamorous and eye-catching packaging of tobacco packaging to children and young people in the south west. The aim of this campaign is to see tobacco sold only in standardised coloured packaging with plain font brand name and increased health warnings. It is backed by Cancer Research UK, British Heart Foundation, the Royal College of Physicians, ASH and other leading charities and health bodies.

Please read the briefing about the campaign which includes a link to the website where students and teaching staff can sign up and pledge their support.

Dr. Diana Howlett, Weston Area Health Trust

Dr Diana Howlett would like to let her patients and their families know that she will be leaving Weston Area Health Trust in May to take up a post at North Bristol Trust. Please read the announcement here.

Plain Tobacco Packaging Will Protect Our Children

Every year in the UK 80,000 people die of smoking related diseases. Over the same period 340,000 children will experiment with smoking.

Smoking kills more people than alcohol, obesity, suicide, drugs and road traffic deaths combined.

Tobacco packaging remains one of the last ways that the tobacco industry is able to market their products to the next generation. From brightly coloured packs that appear to be crayon boxes at first glance, to 'slims' designed to conjure up an image of a more elegant lifestyle, supermarket shelves are crammed full of enticing and sophisticated designs.

Please take a moment to look at www.plainpacksprotect.co.uk to find out more about how the tobacco industry uses packaging to attract new smokers, and how plain tobacco packaging will help protect our children from a lifetime of smoking.

The Government has begun its consultation on the case for plain packs and this is a real opportunity, whether you are a smoker or non-smoker, to have your voice heard. Australia has already passed legislation which will introduce plain packaging from December 2012. Wouldn't it be great if we were next?

The tobacco industry is fighting the legislation in Australia every step of the way. They will do the same in this country. Please take this opportunity to protect our children by adding your name in support of plain packs at www.plainpacksprotect.co.uk.

Below this is the council's logo and name, 'Blackburn with Darwen Borough Council INFORMATION GATEWAY', along with links for 'Accessibility', 'Help', 'Site map', and 'Website feedback'. A search bar is located in the top right corner.

The main content area features a left-hand navigation menu with categories such as 'Advice and benefits', 'Births, marriages & deaths', 'Business and regeneration', 'Council and democracy', 'Crime and Safety', 'Education and lifelong learning', 'Environment and waste', 'Health and social care', 'Housing and planning', 'Jobs and careers', 'Leisure and culture', 'Neighbourhoods', 'Preparing for emergencies', and 'Transport and streets'. The 'Crime and Safety' category is highlighted with a red circle.

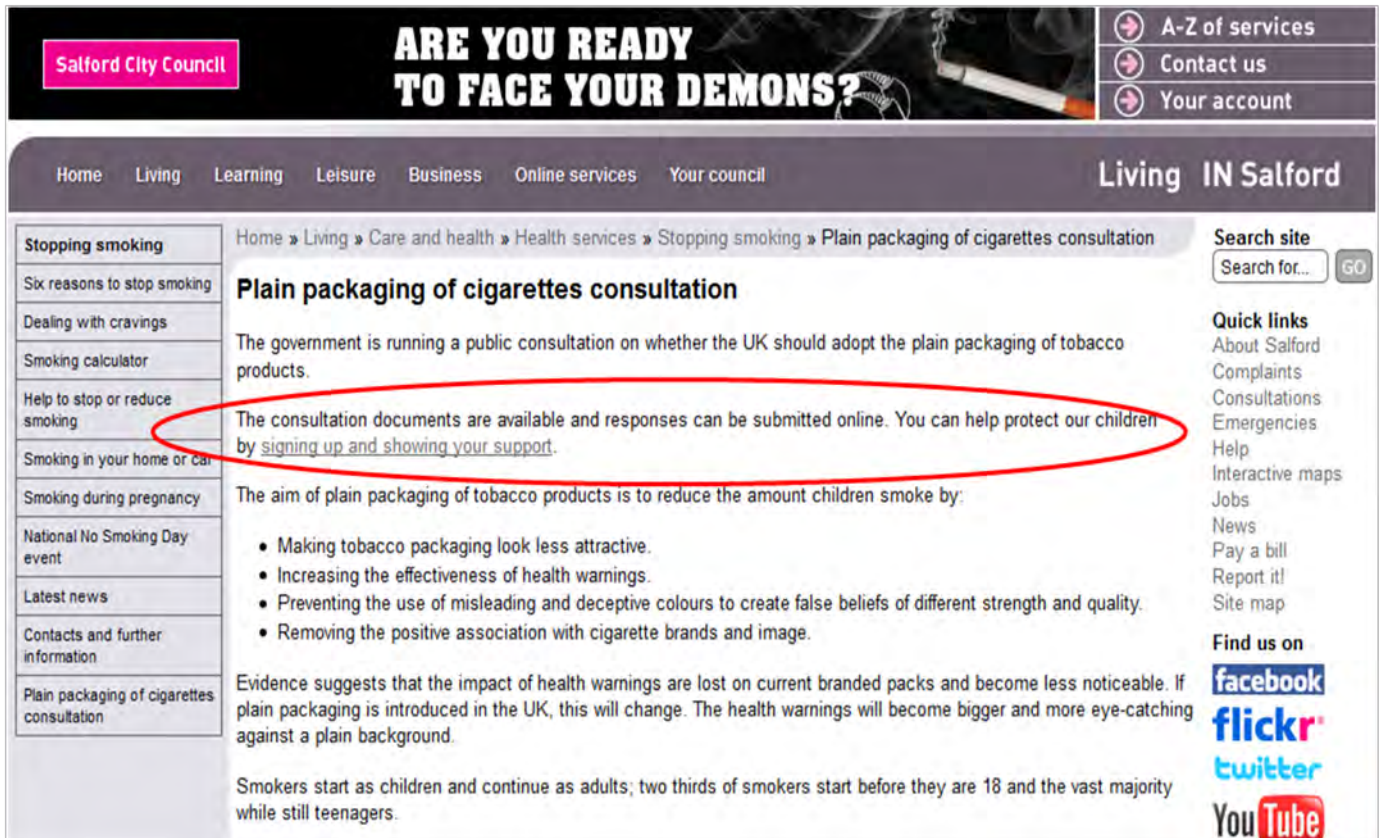

The main article is titled 'Campaign against glitzy cigarette packaging launches in Blackburn with Darwen to protect children from smoking'. The first paragraph, also circled in red, reads: 'From today parents in Blackburn with Darwen will urge the government to take action to curb tobacco industry marketing and protect children from cigarettes – following today's launch of a national public consultation into plain, standardised tobacco packaging.'

The article continues with the following text: 'The "Plain Packs Protect" campaign, supported by Tobacco Free Futures, has been launched in Blackburn with Darwen and across the North West to highlight that tobacco packaging is now an important way in which the tobacco industry engages new young smokers. A new UK plain packaging law would mean the end of eye-catching branding including shiny holograms, pretty pastel colours and novelty wrappers. Blackburn with Darwen has an estimated 25,700 smokers costing the area approximately £40.1m every year. Two thirds of smokers start before they are 18 and smoking is still the key cause of deaths in England with more people dying from smoking than the six other major causes, including obesity and alcohol. In Blackburn with Darwen smoking claims the lives of around 256 people every year. Plain, standardised packaging of tobacco products will impact on smoking in three key ways: it will reduce the attractiveness to young people; curb misleading health messages and increase the prominence of the picture health warnings on packs, making them more impactful. Dominic Harrison, Director of Public Health for Blackburn with Darwen said "We welcome the government's public consultation and encourage people, especially parents, to respond and support this public health measure which will have a positive impact on the health of young people in Blackburn with Darwen.'

Plain packaging of cigarettes consultation

The government is running a public consultation on whether the UK should adopt the plain packaging of tobacco products.

The consultation documents are available and responses can be submitted online. You can help protect our children by signing up and showing your support.

The aim of plain packaging of tobacco products is to reduce the amount children smoke by:

- Making tobacco packaging look less attractive.
- Increasing the effectiveness of health warnings.
- Preventing the use of misleading and deceptive colours to create false beliefs of different strength and quality.
- Removing the positive association with cigarette brands and image.

Evidence suggests that the impact of health warnings are lost on current branded packs and become less noticeable. If plain packaging is introduced in the UK, this will change. The health warnings will become bigger and more eye-catching against a plain background.

Smokers start as children and continue as adults; two thirds of smokers start before they are 18 and the vast majority while still teenagers.

Plain tobacco packaging - your support wanted

Tuesday, 24 April 2012

A consultation is underway about the possible introduction of standardised packaging for tobacco products - and your local NHS is urging people to make their views known.

The Government has an open mind on the proposal and responses are invited from any interested person, business or organisation. The consultation closes on 10 July so there is plenty of time to give a considered view on the proposals.

Visit the Plain Packs Protect website to lend your support. Alternatively, respond to the full consultation on the Department of Health website.

What do the proposals include?

If the proposal is approved, it would mean that all tobacco products would be required to look the same. Standardised packaging could consist of, for example:

- No branding
- A uniform colour
- A standard font and text for any writing on the pack.

Dr Ruth Milton, on behalf of the Directors of Public Health for the Southampton, Hampshire, Isle

Council Leads Country on Support for Plain Tobacco Packaging

Friday 16th March 2012 (ref: 69/2012)

Wigan Council members overwhelming voted to urge the Health Secretary to bring forward legislation to introduce plain packs for tobacco products, at a meeting of the Full Council this week.

Elected members took part in a lively debate about health promotion and the need to de-normalise smoking in society. In supporting the motion, councillors sent a strong signal that Wigan wants to lead from the front.

The motion was proposed by Cllr Keith Cunliffe from the council's ruling cabinet. Opening the debate, he confessed his stance at once. "I admit I am a smoker and I wish I wasn't. As a smoker I know it is hard to give up and easier not to start. We need to support all measures that would help future generations to not take up smoking."

The decision will feed into a national three month consultation on cigarette plain packaging which is due to launch soon. The consultation will determine whether plain packaging could be effective in reducing the number of young people who take up smoking. If the new plain packaging law is passed in the UK, it could mean the end of glitzy cigarette brands.

Cllr Cunliffe showed examples of how the tobacco industry use innovative package designs to promote their products. He said: "Published, peer reviewed research is clear that plain, standardised packs are less attractive especially to young people, strengthen the impact of health warnings and make packs less misleading to customers who seem to associate colours with risk levels."

He noted that Australia is set to be the first country in the world to move to plain designs later this year, although not without challenge from the industry itself.

1827 people in Wigan Borough die from a smoking related disease each year – over 609 per 100 thousand population aged over 35. The meeting heard that with advertising bans in place, the industry is increasingly focussed on design to maintain a brand awareness. In some of the most deprived communities in the borough, adult smoking rates are close to 50 per cent of the population.

The motion was carried and makes Wigan Council the first in the country to make this point in support of further marginalisation of tobacco products.

Watching the debate in the council chamber was Dr Kate Ardern, director of public health for Wigan Borough. Afterwards she thanked Cllr Cunliffe for his stance.

"This is a serious point well made by someone who understands the lure of the product," says Dr Ardern. "Wigan Borough has some of the highest rates of smoking prevalence in the region and that's why we are right to lead by example in sending this message out."

Andrea Crossfield, Director of Tobacco Free Futures, who are leading the Plain Packs Protect campaign in the North West said: "Wigan Council's support for this is the first of its kind and shows excellent leadership from Cllr Cunliffe and Dr Ardern. Cllr Cunliffe made the points to the recent AGMA Health Commission and I hope this shows the way we can keep moving the debate on to de-normalise tobacco. We urge people to support plain packaging and make smoking history for children by signing up to the consultation online."

Standardised packaging of tobacco

This is a campaign Fresh is promoting alongside partners at Cancer Research UK, the Faculty of Public Health, Action on Smoking and Health, Royal College of Physicians and the British Heart Foundation, and other regional offices of tobacco control at Tobacco Free Futures (North West) and Smokefree South West.

Tobacco brands are used by the tobacco companies to recruit new customers who are nearly always children (a survey found 43% of current North East smokers started between the ages of 10 and 14). By contrast, plain standardised packaging is rated as much less attractive by children and young people. A recent survey found 66% of people in the North East support plain packaging, with only 10% opposing.

You can see what some of the real packs on the market look like and how attractive they are.

The Department of Health has now launched a consultation on whether plain, standardised packaging would help to reduce smoking over and above that of current initiatives - in particular its role in reducing youth uptake. A major research report commissioned by Cancer Research UK has also been published demonstrating the evidence for this.

The consultation will run until July 10 and Fresh are urging you to show your support and respond positively. You can do so in two ways:

- Sign up your support as an individual on the Plain Packs Form. You only have to give your name and address and it will only take two minutes. This will also ask permission for your submission to also be forwarded to your MP - please agree to this as Fresh need MPs to know how much the public backs this. So far over 37,000 people have signed up nationally
- Submit a more detailed consultation response as a professional to the DoH tobacco packaging consultation. The DoH wants to hear from individuals and organisations with an interest in health as to whether these proposals would reduce smoking over and above current initiatives. Fresh will be making a template submission available and can help you with this.

PLAIN PACKAGING CAMPAIGN
CIGARETTE PACK DESIGNS

The Plain Packs Protect campaign wants all cigarettes in plain standardised packs. The evidence is clear that plain packs are

- less attractive, especially to young people;
- strengthens the impact of health warnings; and
- make the packs less misleading.

Tobacco companies describe current packs as 'visual advertising for the brand'.

Partner news article.

As you may be aware the Government has launched a public consultation on whether or not to standardise the packaging of tobacco products.

As part of a broad alliance of public health bodies and health charities we are supporting the proposal.

Evidence shows that plain, standardised packaging of tobacco products will impact on smoking in three key ways:

- It will reduce the attractiveness of the packets to young people
- Correct misconceptions that some brands are less harmful than others
- Increase the prominence of health warnings on packs making them more powerful

Presently, the tobacco industry uses attractive packaging to lure new smokers into addiction. Every year 340,000 children in the UK are tempted to try smoking. A recent British Heart Foundation survey also reported that 86 per cent of young people surveyed in the North West thought plain packs were less attractive than branded packs.

Examples of packaging used to target young females can be seen to the right of this page (top image.)

An example of what standardised packaging may look like if the Government introduces it (bottom image.)

Examples of packaging used to target young females

Example of what government standardised packaging may look like

Smoking is a childhood addiction with 83 per cent of smokers and former smokers in the North West trying smoking before they are 14 years old. We believe that plain, standardised cigarette packaging will help prevent children taking up smoking.

Despite the progress in reducing levels of smoking in this country it is still the biggest killer. It is essential that there are a large number of responses to the consultation to demonstrate that there is substantial public support to stamp out the use of brand packaging to advertise and promote smoking.

APPENDIX B

NHS and Dept of Health funded bodies

The NHS has a privileged position in the hearts and minds of the British public, and is almost entirely financed by the British public. As such it should exercise extreme caution when commenting on politically contentious health proposals and also consider the appropriateness of the outlets used – eg the use of NHS quit smoking websites otherwise used to assist vulnerable patients to quit smoking; NHS twitter feeds otherwise used for public health information alerts; NHS websites otherwise used to direct patients to available health services.

Sadly, a substantial amount of public finance appears to have been used to influence a public consultation, rather than to deliver healthcare within a framework decided by the public and Parliament. It would be egregious to attempt to match the political campaigning arm of public health spending with, for example, the cost of a heart bypass operation or the salary of a nurse. But it is unambiguously the case that some measure of taxpayer financial support is being diverted from frontline services into a political public relations campaign.

In short, finance which might be used for smoking cessation programmes or education initiatives aimed at children has clearly been diverted into a campaign to attempt to affect public policy at the time of a highly contentious and controversial public consultation. It is simply impossible to read or interpret the statements listed below in any other fashion. I believe that all of them have been drafted and promoted by staff paid for by taxpayers. This is surely no more acceptable than local councils of any particular stripe spending council tax revenue on hiring billboard space – or paying professional twitterers – to support their own chosen candidate?

I am also concerned by seemingly widespread NHS trust promotion of plain packaging consultation “roadshows” which frequently promise “experts” and “information” on the consultation, but are in fact universally, without exception, supporting the “plainpacksprotect” campaign. This is, as far as I can gather, the campaigning vehicle to seek to influence the government to proceed with legislation for tobacco plain packaging following the consultation. As far as I can ascertain, there is not a single example, anywhere in the entire country, of this NHS-funded effort giving any airtime or credence to any “expert” or providing any “information” which might suggest that plain packaging could be injurious to the public’s health. In short, this is a roadshow and information campaign no different to that which one might expect from President Obama or Governor Romney. Or from the UK’s various political parties. That is to say, it is a campaign – and a highly politicised one.

The following list is a mere sample of such activity. As far as I can gather, 100% of these interventions have been paid for by the taxpayer – and, indeed, the individual undertaking these actions has been strongly encouraged, licensed and financed to do so (e.g. these are not “rogue” statements by a handful of public sector employees).

To my extreme frustration, this does not represent the entirety of NHS trust activity in promoting the plain packaging option in the present consultation. I would assume that their efforts are considerably more substantial than those listed there.

Residents from Dorset joined the thousands from across the country who have signed up to protect children from the influence of glitzy tobacco packaging.

Every year, another 340,000 children in the UK are tempted in some shape or form to try smoking. Research shows that they are more likely to be lured by the designed tobacco packs, than by plain packs.

Oliver Letwin, MP for West Dorset voiced his support:

'We all know that smoking damages health – and it is obviously extremely important to make sure that young people are not led into smoking by attractive packaging.'

Expert staff were in (insert locality) to talk to people about the different types of packaging seen every day by our young people and asking them to sign up to show their support. Consultation on plain tobacco packaging

A UK-wide consultation on whether tobacco should be sold in standardised, plain packaging, has been launched by Health Secretary Andrew Lansley.

The consultation will be open for responses from 16 April to 10 July 2012. Any person, business or organisation with an interest is encouraged to respond.

A copy of the consultation can be found at <http://consultations.dh.gov.uk>.

Plain Packaging for Tobacco Products

The purpose of this consultation is to seek the views of interested people, businesses and organizations on a policy initiative that would require the packaging of tobacco products to be standardized, the aim being to improve public health by reducing the use of tobacco. Within the context of tobacco packaging, standardized packaging is sometimes referred to as 'plain packaging'.

Plain packaging means that all brand names would have to be written in a standard typeface, colour and size. And all other trademarks, logos, colour schemes and graphics would be banned. This could help make tobacco packaging look less attractive to children and help make the health warnings to stand out more.

Every year in the UK 340,000 children in the UK are tempted to try smoking (DOH 2009) and research has indicated that they are more likely to be lured by designed tobacco packs, than by plain packs. Further to this a recent systematic review into plain packaging for tobacco products indicates that 'plain packaging would reduce the attractiveness and appeal of tobacco products, it would increase the noticeability and effectiveness of health warnings and messages, and it would reduce the use of design techniques that may mislead consumers' (Moodie et al 2012). A number of fact sheets containing further information can be downloaded from the section at the bottom of this page.

This legislation has been passed by government in Australia and will come into effect in December 2012.

Coinciding with the consultation launch, the Public Health Research Consortium has published a systematic evidence review: Plain tobacco packaging: A systematic review. The review is available from: http://phrc.lshtm.ac.uk/project_2011-2016_006.html.

Keep up-to-date with what's going on in the world of Quit4Life:

Plain tobacco packaging – your support wanted

A consultation is underway about the possible introduction of standardised packaging for tobacco products – and your local NHS is urging people to make their views known.

If the proposal is approved, it would mean that all tobacco products would be required to look the same. Standardised packaging could consist of, for example:

- No branding
- A uniform colour
- A standard font and text for any writing on the pack.

Dr Ruth Milton, on behalf of the Directors of Public Health for the Southampton, Hampshire, Isle of Wight and Portsmouth PCT Cluster, says there are merits to having plain packaging on tobacco products.

She said: "If all tobacco products were sold in plain packs, research indicates that they would be less attractive to children, stop young smokers thinking that some brands are less harmful than others, and it would make the health warnings stand out even more.

"Quitting smoking is the single most important thing that smokers can do to improve their health – but even better is not starting in the first place. Our view is that any sensible measure that discourages people from smoking is worthwhile – for their health, and that of those close to them."

The Government has an open mind on the proposal and responses are invited from any interested person, business or organisation. The consultation closes on 10 July so there is plenty of time to give a considered view on the proposals.

Visit the Plain Packs Protect website to lend your support. Alternatively, respond to the full consultation on the Department of Health website

Devon's Youth Parliament backs plain packs campaign

Devon's Youth Parliament is backing a national campaign to remove the last legally allowed form of tobacco advertising.

In Devon, about 1,350 fifteen year olds smoke and every year, another 340,000 children in the UK are tempted in some shape or form to try smoking with research showing that they are more likely to be lured by the designed tobacco packs, than with plain packs.

This week the Department of Health launched its consultation on tobacco packaging.

The aim of plain packaging of tobacco products is to reduce the number of children who smoke by:

- Making tobacco packaging look less attractive
- Increasing the effectiveness of health warnings
- Preventing the use of misleading and deceptive colours to create false beliefs of different strength and quality
- Removing the positive association with cigarette brands and image

Evidence suggests that the impact of health warnings are lost on current branded packs and become less noticeable.

Haleemah Asharaf, UK Youth Parliament Member for South Hams and Teignbridge, said:

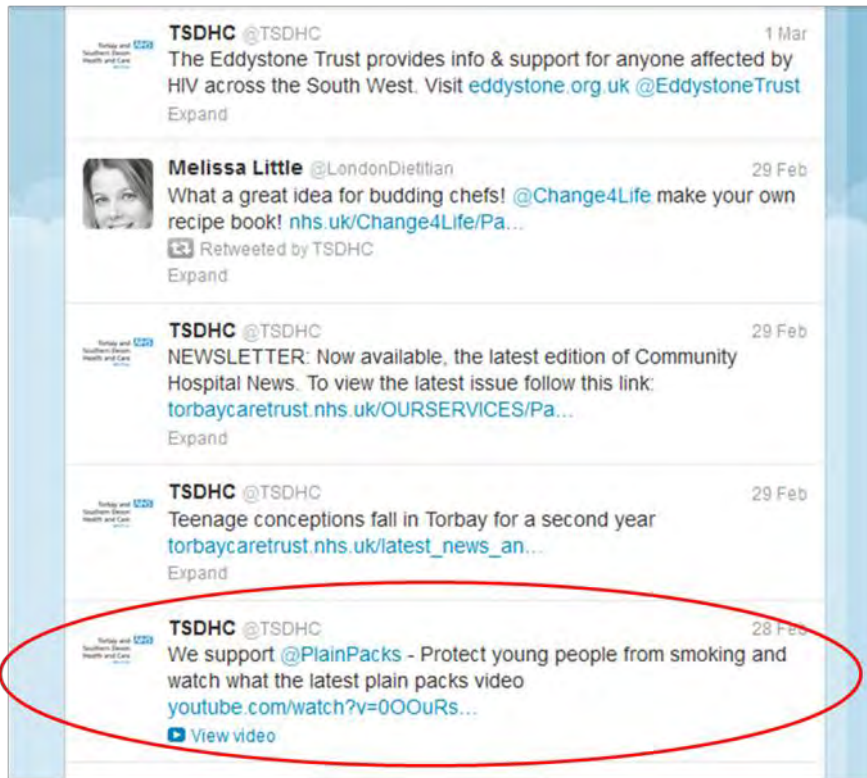

"I am looking forward to tackling this current and important topic. Smoking damages health and really affects a person mentally and physically. I want to be a part of something which changes people's lives and makes a difference. This campaign will shape a healthier and safer future for the next generation."

Dr Virginia Pearson, NHS Devon's director of public health, said:

"Any action that prevents young people from starting to smoke will save lives as over 1200 people in Devon die from a smoking-related disease each year. Most smokers start as children and continue as adults. Two thirds start before they are 18 and become smokers while still teenagers - these are sobering facts."

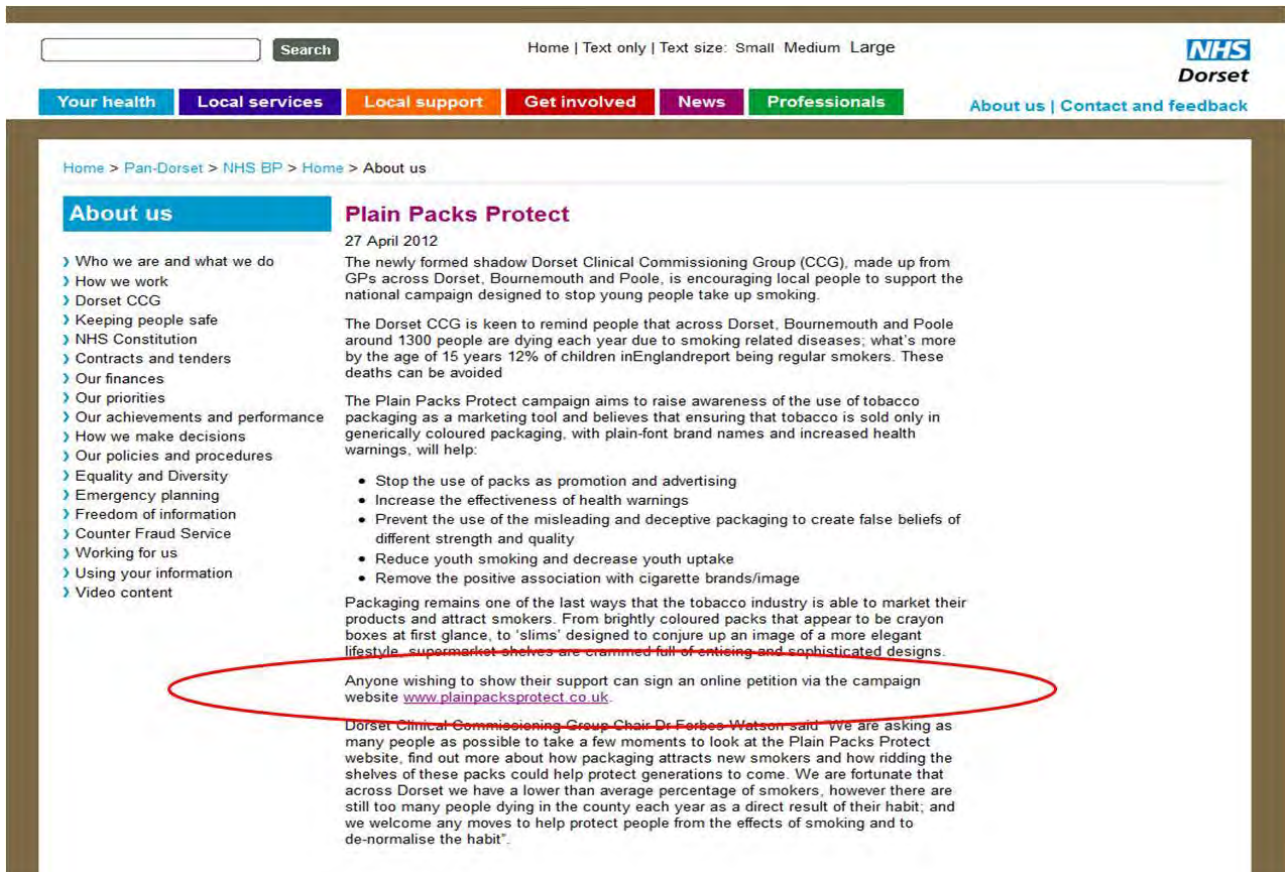

The Smokefree Devon Alliance is encouraging people of all ages to go to www.plainpacksprotect.co.uk to find out more and have their voice heard in the Government consultation.

Call to protect children in the East of England from glitzy tobacco packaging

14 March 2012

Smoke Free East of England is supporting a campaign – ‘plain packs protect’ – to turn off the tap of new smokers in the East.

Every year in the UK, 340,000 children will experiment with smoking.

Smokers start as children – two thirds of smokers start before they are 18 – and continue into adulthood as addicts.

Research shows that children are more likely to be lured by the colourful, glitzy or glamorous tobacco packs currently available than if tobacco was sold in plain packs. Currently, brands are marketed in shiny, holographic packs, or as ‘super slims’ which are particularly attractive to young women.

That’s why Smoke Free East of England is backing a campaign to raise awareness of how tobacco pack branding is being used by tobacco manufacturers to recruit new, vulnerable young smokers each year. The ‘plain packs protect’ campaign is backed by Cancer Research UK, the British Heart Foundation and the Royal College of Physicians.

Dr Anne McConville, Acting Regional Director of Public Health, said:

“Smoking kills half of all smokers. But young people are not always aware of the risks when they experiment with smoking. We must act now to protect our children becoming the future generation of smokers and from taking up this fatal habit.”

Andrew Butler, of the East of England Trading Standards Association, said: “Tobacco is the only legal product on shop shelves that, if used exactly as the manufacturers intend, will kill one in two users. Attractive brands make cigarettes seem more glamorous to children and young people, and are more likely to trigger under age purchase attempts.”

Cllr Sharon Taylor, Leader of Stevenage Borough Council, and Chair of the East of England Tobacco Control Steering Group, said: “Tobacco packaging remains one of the last ways that the tobacco industry is able to market their products to the next generation. I would urge people in the East of England to take a moment to pledge their support for plain tobacco packaging at www.plainpacksprotect.co.uk and help protect our children from a lifetime of smoking.”

The Government has committed to consult on plain packaging from Spring 2012. Anyone can respond to the consultation and have their voice heard. Australia has already passed legislation which will introduce plain packaging from December 2012.

Plain packaging consultation

The UK Government has today launched its consultation on the issue of plain standardised packaging of tobacco products. The consultation will be open for responses from 16 April to 10 July 2012. Any person, business or organisation with an interest is encouraged to respond.

Details of the consultation can be found at <http://consultations.dh.gov.uk>.

This is an opportunity to promote the importance of implementing plain packaging for tobacco products, which aims to reduce the number of children who smoke by:

- Making tobacco packaging look less attractive
- Increasing the effectiveness of health warnings
- Preventing the use of misleading and deceptive colours to create false beliefs of different strength and quality
- Removing the positive association with cigarette brands and images

You can help to end cigarette marketing for good by responding to the consultation. Don't forget to encourage your colleagues, friends and family to do the same. There has already been an incredible response to the plain packs protects petition, with over 25,000 signatories already. If you haven't already done so please add your name to the petition and encourage your friends and colleagues to do the same by signing the petition on www.plainpacksprotect.co.uk.

Plain tobacco packaging – your support wanted
20 April 2012

A consultation is underway about the possible introduction of standardised packaging for tobacco products – and your local NHS is urging people to make their views known.

If the proposal is approved, it would mean that all tobacco products would be required to look the same. Standardised packaging could consist of, for example:

- No branding
- A uniform colour
- A standard font and text for any writing on the pack.

Dr Paul Edmondson-Jones, on behalf of the Directors of Public Health for the Southampton, Hampshire, Isle of Wight and Portsmouth PCT Cluster, says there are merits to having plain packaging on tobacco products.

He said: "If all tobacco products were sold in plain packs, research indicates that they would be less attractive to children, stop young smokers thinking that some brands are less harmful than others, and it would make the health warnings stand out even more.

"Quitting smoking is the single most important thing that smokers can do to improve their health – but even better is not starting in the first place. Our view is that any sensible measure that discourages people from smoking is worthwhile – for their health, and that of those close to them.

"The Government has an open mind on the proposal and responses are invited from any interested person, business or organisation. The consultation closes on 10 July so there is plenty of time to give a considered view on the proposals."

'Plain Packs Protect' Campaign

Contact: 0191 229 2903 Judith Macmorran, Senior Health Improvement Specialist

Every year, another 340,000 children in the UK are tempted to try smoking. In Newcastle 15% of 15 year old are already regular smokers (Health Related Behaviour Survey, 2011). Evidence shows that young people are more likely to be attracted by designed tobacco packs, than by plain packs.

This is why Cancer Research UK, the British Heart Foundation, Fresh and Smoke Free Newcastle are just a few of the organisations nationwide supporting the campaign for plain and standardised cigarette packets.

With regulation in place to restrict television, radio and other advertising, packaging is becoming more and more important to the tobacco industry to help sell their products. The tobacco industry spends a fortune on glossy colourful designs to entice new smokers to buy cigarettes. Shiny holograms, pretty pastel colours and wrappers are just some of the eye-catching pack designs available, and there is building evidence to suggest that these packs can attract and mislead children. The attached factsheet gives examples of packs on sale in shops now.

The Government is shortly to launch a consultation on whether tobacco should be sold in plain, standardised packs to make smoking less attractive to children and Smoke Free Newcastle would like to ask for your support for introducing plain and standardised tobacco packs.

Members of the Smokefree Action Coalition have launched a new website in support of the campaign for standardised, generic packaging of tobacco products.
www.plainpacksprotect.co.uk

Within just over a week of launching, over 1,500 people have already shown their support for the campaign. The website is being updated with new materials, but already includes:

- Word on the street – a short video showing what the public thinks about plain packaging
- The effects of cigarette packaging – a one page briefing explaining why plain packaging would reduce the number of children smoking
- The tobacco industry myths exposed – a one page briefing countering the arguments against plain packaging.

What can you can do to promote plain packaging?

The government is due to launch a 3-month public consultation starting in spring 2012, on whether the UK should adopt the plain, generic packaging of tobacco products, recently adopted by the Australian government.

The Dudley Stop Smoking Service backs plans to remove branding from cigarette packets

April 19, 2012

The Dudley Stop Smoking Service today welcomed the government's consultation plans to remove branding from cigarette packs sold in England, which were recently announced by Health Secretary, Andrew Lansley.

With research suggesting that attractive packaging entices smokers to buy cigarettes the Dudley Stop Smoking Service believes plain packaging will reduce the attractiveness of tobacco branding and make packs less appealing, especially to young people. The service also believes plain packs will strengthen the impact of health warnings and prevent the use of PRESS RELEASE ... PRESS RELEASE ... PRESS RELEASE ...

PARENTS ASKED TO PLEDGE THEIR SUPPORT FOR PLAIN CIGARETTE PACKAGING CAMPAIGN

A Somerset public health consultant is urging parents to sign up to support a campaign promoting the plain packaging of tobacco products.

The "Support Plain Packs – Save Our Children" campaign¹ hopes to encourage thousands of parents to sign up online and show their support for the introduction of legislation which will force tobacco manufacturers to only display their products in plain packaging.

Every year a shocking 340,000 children and young people in England are encouraged to take up smoking.

Paul Harwood, NHS Somerset Consultant in Public Health said, "Tobacco packaging remains one of the last ways the tobacco industry is able to market their products to the younger generation.

"Due to the death rates of current smokers and the ever growing number of ex-smokers who have successfully quit, the tobacco industry must keep on finding new ways to recruit a new generation of smokers to replace those who have now died or quit this highly addictive habit.

"I am sure Somerset parents will wish to express their support for packaging restrictions upon the tobacco industry as they can be sure they will be playing their part in ensuring fewer children take up this seriously unhealthy habit."

Parents can show their support for the campaign by going to www.plainpacksprotect.co.uk

Calls to curb eye-catching cigarette packets.

Stockport residents are being urged to support a campaign to make cigarette packets less eye-catching in a bid to help stop children becoming smokers.

Around 30,000 of Stockport's smokers picked up the habit as teenagers and research has shown that youngsters are heavily influenced by branded packaging.

The tobacco industry has described the branding on packets as their "silent salesman" and target young people with attractive colours, logos and pack shapes.

Now the fight is on to force the industry to scrap the attractive packaging and use plain, standardised packets instead.

Dr Stephen Watkins, Stockport's Director of Public Health, wants people to get involved following the launch of a government-led public consultation on the issue.

Dr Watkins said "We know that the tobacco industry spends a lot of time and money on developing attractive cigarette packets to gain new customers to their product.

"We think it is unacceptable to lure youngsters into an addictive habit that will damage their health and kill 1 in 4 who take up the habit.

"Selling cigarettes in plain, standardised packets will reduce their attractiveness to young people, correct misconceptions that some brands are less harmful than others and make the health warnings on packs more powerful.

"I'd urge everyone to tell the government that they support the move towards plain packaging."

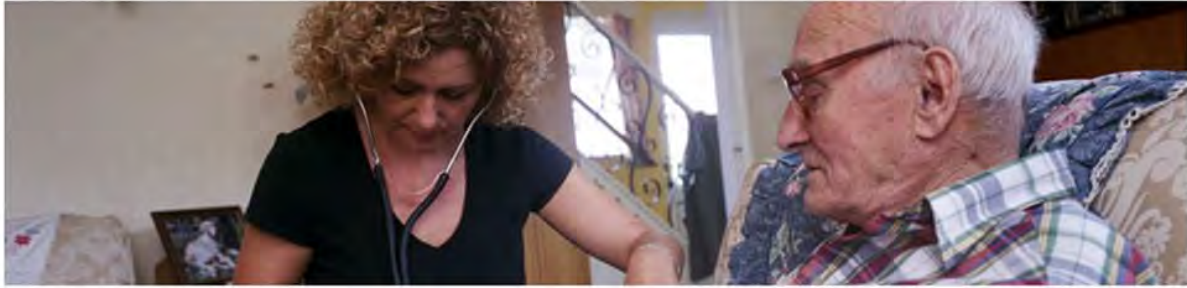

Stockport has around 49,000 smokers and two thirds of them started before they were 18. Smoking claims the lives of almost 500 people in Stockport every year.

The "Plain Packs Protect" campaign is supported by a range of organisations including Cancer Research and the British Heart Foundation.

The UK is the first country in Europe to hold a public consultation on the issue but Australia has already committed to introducing plain drab olive green packaging displaying only the name of the product brand with graphic health warnings.

To support the campaign go to www.tobaccofreefutures.org/plainpacksprotect.

Smokefree South West launched a national campaign encouraging support for plain tobacco packaging – so far more than 25,700 people have given their backing through its online petition at www.plainpacksprotect.co.uk. It will be submitted for consideration by the Government as part of its consultation.

Carolyn Rule, Cabinet Member for Health & Wellbeing and HR at Cornwall Council, said she hoped more people from Cornwall would come forward and show their support for the campaign.

She said: "I would encourage people to help make plain tobacco packaging a reality in the UK by signing up to this online petition and letting their local MP know their views. No parent wants to see their child facing a premature death and anything that can discourage them from being tempted by cigarettes should be welcomed."

Public urged to support plain cigarette packaging

Every year 340,000 children in England try smoking and 200,000 under 16s become regular smokers.

Research shows they are more likely to be attracted by the designed promotional tobacco packs, than by plain packaging. Evidence suggests that the impact of health warnings is lost on branded packs. Some brands are marketed in ways that are particularly attractive to young women. By introducing plain packaging, the health warnings will become bigger and more eye catching against a plain background.

Smokefree Barnsley welcomes the launch of the Government's consultation on plain packaging

As a member of The Smokefree Action Coalition – Smokefree Barnsley along with 191 other health and welfare organisations is working to make smoking history for our children. Smokefree Barnsley welcomes the launch of the Government's consultation on tobacco packaging. The consultation runs until the 10th July 2012.

consultation runs until the 10th July 2012.

The Smokefree Action Coalition supports putting tobacco products in plain packaging as essential because tobacco packs are now the major promotional tool for the tobacco industry. It is children who take up smoking: two-thirds of smokers start before the age of 18.

There is good evidence that plain, standardised packs are:

- less attractive, particularly to young people;
- make the health warnings stand out more; and
- reduce the ability of the packaging to mislead consumers about the harms of smoking.

There is already widespread public support for requiring tobacco to be sold in plain standardised packaging with the product name in standard lettering. A recent poll showing an example of a plain pack found that in the Yorkshire and the Humber overall 61% of adults supported this while just 10% opposed the measure.

Elizabeth Shassere, Director of Public Health for Barnsley said:

"I welcome this important consultation. Every year 300,000 people try smoking for the first time and around 200,000 become regular smokers. Children are more likely to be attracted to the colourful glitzy packaging that gives misleading messages to youth and adult smokers. If we are to halt the smoking epidemic robust measures are necessary and putting tobacco in plain packaging will go along way towards achieving this goal."

Call to protect children in Norfolk from glitzy tobacco packaging

NHS Norfolk and Waveney is supporting a campaign - 'plain packs protect' - to turn off the tap of new smokers in the county.

Every year in the UK, 340,000 children will experiment with smoking.

Smokers start as children - two thirds of smokers start before they are 18 - and continue into adulthood as addicts.

That's why NHS Norfolk and Waveney is backing a campaign to raise awareness of how tobacco pack branding is being used by tobacco manufacturers to recruit new, vulnerable young smokers each year. The 'plain packs protect' campaign is backed by Cancer Research UK, the British Heart Foundation and the Royal College of Physicians.

Lucy Macleod, a consultant in public health at NHS Norfolk and Waveney, said: "Smoking kills half of all smokers. But young people are not always aware of the risks when they experiment with smoking. We must act now to protect our children becoming the future generation of smokers and from taking up this fatal habit."

Vicki Snelgrove, Tobacco Control Commissioning Advisor at NHS Norfolk and Waveney, said: "Tobacco packaging remains one of the last ways that the tobacco industry is able to market their products to the next generation

"I would urge people in Norfolk and Waveney to take a moment to pledge their support for plain tobacco packaging at www.plainpacksprotect.co.uk and help protect our children from a lifetime of smoking."

The Government has committed to consult on plain packaging from Spring 2012. Anyone can respond to the consultation and have their voice heard. Australia has already passed legislation which will introduce plain packaging from December 2012.

Roadshow to promote plain packs

Published: 28/05/2012

Windsor Castle will be a backdrop to a lively road show that will provide information about the consultation on plain packaging of cigarettes on Saturday June 2. Plain packaging ambassadors, all day, will approach locals and UK tourists alike to promote the online petition and campaign website:
<http://www.plainpacksprotect.co.uk/>.

The petition backing the plain packaging has already been signed by more than 50,000 people. ~~It will be submitted for consideration by the government as part of its consultation.~~

Every year 340,000 children in England try smoking and 200,000 under-16s become regular smokers. Research shows they are more likely to be attracted by the designed promotional tobacco packs, than by plain packaging.

Evidence suggests that the impact of health warnings is lost on branded packs. Some brands are marketed in shiny packs or as 'super slims' which are particularly attractive to young women. By introducing plain packaging, the health warnings will become bigger and more eye-catching against a plain background.

Director of Public Health for NHS Berkshire East, Pat Riordan said, "The idea behind this proposal is to stop packaging itself acting as an advert to youngsters, tempting them into a highly-addictive habit that could seriously damage their health and lead to an early death. We urge people to participate in the consultation and make their views about plain packaging heard."

If introduced, this new legislation will help to discourage children from smoking, as it will:

- make tobacco packaging look less attractive
- increase the effectiveness of health warnings
- prevent the use of misleading colours and branding to create false beliefs that some cigarettes are less harmful than others

The government's consultation closes on 10 July. For details, visit:

Call to protect children in Essex from glitzy tobacco packaging

08 Jun 2012 [] []

Smoke Free Essex is supporting a campaign – 'plain packs protect' – to turn off the tap of new smokers in the County.

Every year in the UK, 340,000 children will experiment with smoking.

Smokers start as children – two thirds of smokers start before they are 18 – and continue into adulthood as addicts.

Research shows that children are more likely to be lured by the colourful, glitzy or glamorous tobacco packs currently available than if tobacco was sold in plain packs. Currently, brands are marketed in shiny, holographic packs, or as 'super slims' which are particularly attractive to young women.

That's why Smoke Free Essex is backing a campaign to raise awareness of how tobacco pack branding is being used by tobacco manufacturers to recruit new, vulnerable young smokers each year. The 'plain packs protect' campaign is backed by Cancer Research UK, the British Heart Foundation and the Royal College of Physicians.

Dr Mike Gogarty, Director of Public Health, North Cluster said: "Smoking is the biggest preventable cause of ill health and the single most important lifestyle factor affecting health inequalities. The rates of smoking are reducing in Essex but more work needs to be done. Young people are not always aware of the risks when they experiment with smoking. We must act now to protect our children becoming the future generation of smokers and from taking up this fatal habit."

Dr Andrea Atherton, Chair of Smoke free Essex and Director of Public Health at NHS South East Essex & Southend Council, said: "I would urge people in Essex to take a moment to pledge their support for plain tobacco packaging at www.plainpacksprotect.co.uk and help protect our children from a lifetime of smoking."

The Government is currently conducting a national consultation on plain packaging. Anyone can respond to the consultation and have their voice heard. The deadline for consultation submissions is 10 July 2012. Further details can be found at www.consultations.dh.gov.uk. Australia has already passed legislation which will introduce plain packaging from December 2012.

Plain packets to help pack it in!

18 May 2012

That's the message from Surrey's Director of Public Health who is backing a campaign that could see the introduction of plain packaging for cigarettes, helping to deter young people from taking up the habit.

Every year 340,000 children in England try smoking and 200,000 under-16s become regular smokers. Research shows they are more likely to be attracted by the promotional tobacco packs, than by plain packaging. With this in mind the government has launched a consultation to seek the views of the nation.

Surrey's Director of Public Health, Dr Akeem Ali explains, "Research suggests over 140,000 people in Surrey smoke and it's still the biggest preventable cause of death in Surrey. We welcome any measures that can be taken to deter people from wanting to smoke and help reduce related deaths in the county. That's why I'm supporting the campaign and encouraging people to share their views."

If introduced, this new legislation aims to help discourage children from smoking, as it will:

- make tobacco packaging look less attractive
- increase the effectiveness of health warnings
- prevent the use of misleading branding that creates false belief that some cigarettes are less harmful than others.

As part of the national campaign, roadshows will be taking place in Guildford and Woking, starting next week. Experts will be on hand to talk about the proposals and what the introduction of plain packaging for all cigarettes could mean.

Dates and times are as follows:

- Friday 25 May, University of Surrey, Guildford, 10:00 – 18:00
- Saturday 26 May, Town centre, Guildford, 10:00 – 18:00
- Saturday 23 June, Town centre, Woking, 10:00 – 18:00
- Friday 29 June, Guildhall & Town centre, Guildford, 10:00 – 18:00

"The idea behind this proposal is to stop packaging from acting as an advert for young people, tempting them into a highly-addictive habit that could seriously damage their health. This is your chance to get involved and tell us whether you think these proposals are a good idea." Akeem added.

Have your say on cigarette packaging

NHS Sefton is encouraging people to urge the government to take action against glitzy cigarette packaging and cigarette industry marketing to protect children from smoking.

It follows the launch of a national public consultation around the introduction of plain, standardised tobacco packaging. To highlight the consultation Tobacco Free Futures has launched a campaign, 'Plain Packs Protect', which NHS Sefton is supporting, focusing on how the tobacco industry uses packaging to engage new young smokers,.

A new UK plain packaging law would mean the end of eye catching branding, including shiny holograms, pretty pastel colours and novelty wrappers.
