

the crazy chemist needs human lab rats

The Crazy Chemist concocted mephedrone in his lab last year to mimic ecstasy and coke. This 'legal high' was sold as 'plant food' as a way of getting around the law. It was a nice little earner until it was found to bring on paranoia, overstimulation of the heart and nervous system and even fits, so the government banned it.

The Chemist is mashing up different chemicals and is flogging them under different names and as 'Bath Salts' or 'Pond Cleaner'. Trouble is you don't know what's in them, whether they're really 'legal' or safe, and you can't know how they are going to affect you. One thing is for sure, he won't be worried while you're in A&E having heart palpitations.

Back in his lab, Crazy Chemist came up with a new 'legal' chemical, naphyrone, which some say he sold as NRG-1, which was also found to bring on paranoia and fits, that's why the government banned it too. But NRG-1 wasn't always what it seemed, as the sneaky devil was actually offloading old stock of banned substances and pretending they were still legal.

TALK TO FRANK.COM
OR TEXT YOUR QUESTION TO 82111