Proportions of employees who say they would prefer shorter hours than at present in their current job in the nine sectors, 4 quarter average 2011

For employees aged 18-64, interest in working fewer hours increases with age. In manufacturing and finance, almost a half of the workers aged 50-64 say they would prefer shorter hours than at present in their current job. The proportion who wish to reduce their working hours decreases in the 65+ age group because of the existing prevalence of part-time work for that age group. However, it remains relatively high for that age group in some sectors, notably Construction, Manufacturing and Transport which generally have lower proportions of part-time workers.
