Dear Sir

I was disappointed to read in the Daily Telegraph on the 17th Nov. that the government wishes to stop shops selling alcohol at a discount. As a pensioner (not a millionaire) I take advantage of these offers, why should moderate and occasional drinkers be penalized? Why not allow the police to operate a zero tolerance policy. After all we have all the public nuisance laws we need. Enforce them, you could triple the fines and use prison as well. The police could keep the money from the fines and share them with the local hospital. I hope the government's next plan is NOT to stop shops discounting food to combat obesity.

Yours Sincerely
