The WSTA is of the opinion that without the EU it is unlikely that the 28 nations could agree on the rules for a “single market” let alone improve existing ones or encourage the removal of barriers to international trade. And it is certain that the UK's ability to influence these outcomes would diminish if it left the EU. For alcoholic beverages the single set of EU rules covering the movement of goods in the “single market” works much better than having to deal with 27 separate states with 27 sets of different rules and regulations.
