The meeting I had with [REDACTED] was largely a broad discussion aimed at me scoping what was being proposed and getting to know more about objectives in the context of the G8.

Overall, I would see [REDACTED] wish to create an international data facility being well aligned with Defra's ambitions for data access and management - meaning that the costs of being involved are likely to be small - and that there are likely to be considerable benefits concerned with the development of analytical tools by G8 partners and analysis by the wider academic community.

Consequently, I suggest we engage with the G8 approach to data.

Ian, [REDACTED],

Is there anything on the Open Data Sharing Initiative and discussions with [REDACTED] that it would be useful to Martin to be aware of, if not already, for his discussion with Nick Dyer on Friday? I'm not clear where discussions have got to so far.

Many thanks,

Nick Dyer and I agreed we should discuss DfID plans on food security for the G8 Presidency, and identified 4 pm next Friday as the best option (I think this means shifting my meeting with Debs). Could you fix that up with Nick's office? Not sure whether it should be there or here - but it may turn out to be a phone call rather than face to face.
