

I realise there is a desire to be at the forefront of nuclear technology, but with the obvious dangers and enormous consequences, I would suggest that a more established technology with better understood risks should be adopted rather than the lesser understood risks from the boiling water reactor technology. Let someone else take the risks and pay the price to prove this technology. We should only use it after it has a proven track record elsewhere.

Andrew McManus