What is this event about?

Hosted at the Defence Academy of the United Kingdom by Cranfield University with Dstl, the Defence and Security Doctoral Symposium will be the first of its kind in the UK to provide PhD students and early career researchers in defence and security with an opportunity to present their work to a sector-wide audience. It will cover both technology and social sciences research and will include plenary talks from thought-leaders. The event will also include an exhibition space for industry and other employers of defence and security researchers.

The meeting will be held over two days with a conference dinner and after-dinner speaker. All early career researchers will have the opportunity to make a short, 3 minute presentation and to present a poster or “installation”. The agenda will include invited speakers, panel discussions and 20 – 30 minute technical presentations.

Who should attend?

This event is designed specifically for researchers with an interest in defence and security research outcomes, including: PhD students, early career researchers and their supervisors, representatives from industry, Government and other defence and security-relevant NGOs

Why should you attend?

You will gain exposure to cutting-edge research being undertaken by our early career researchers in defence and security; a breadth of understanding of key issues being investigated across technology- and social sciences-focused research; an opportunity to network widely, an understanding of key policy-drivers in defence and security, and an ideal opportunity to engage with defence and security employers.
