How it works

You'll go for an assessment ride with a DVSA approved trainer. They'll see what you're good at, and what you might need to brush up on.

The ride is fun and enjoyable, and covers a variety of road and traffic conditions. It takes between 1 and 2 hours, which gives you both time to identify any areas you can improve on.

After your assessment ride

If you don't need any training, you'll get a DVSA enhanced rider certificate straight away - that's it!

If there are things you can brush up on, your trainer will work with you on your own personalised training plan.

There are some core modules, which cover things like defensive riding, overtaking and filtering, and bends and corners.

Then you can choose to do extra modules like group riding, riding for work and effective braking techniques.

You might do all-day courses or shorter sessions, depending on what's right for you.

When you've done your training, you'll get the certificate.

Some insurers may offer a discount when you've got your certificate.
