Your Instructions

Mustafa is a 30 year old Sudanese citizen who is referred to you after making an international protection claim. Mustafa had been a school teacher living in Khartoum with his wife, Alaa, when he fled Sudan in December 2018. His flight was prompted by his detention overnight following his arrest by the security forces. Mustafa believes that he was arrested because of his brother's high-profile involvement in campaigning against the then-President Omar Al-Bashir even though Mustafa himself was not involved in the campaigning and disapproved of it. Mustafa was questioned about his brother and threatened with torture if he refused to cooperate with the authorities in the future. He was then released without charge.

After exiting Sudan, Mustafa flew from Ethiopia and transited in Paris before entering the UK on 1st January 2019 on a false passport provided to him by the agent facilitating his entry. The passport was then destroyed. Due to his fear of forcible return, he waited for 2 months before making his claim. Last month President Bashir was overthrown by a revolution and is currently under arrest by the interim government.

Dear Mustafa

Re: Your asylum case

Thank you for coming to see me yesterday to discuss your asylum case. We discussed the claim you have made under the Refugee Convention and the other laws which might give you international protection and protect your human rights, but it is your refugee claim which is most important so I will focus on that.

Your instructions

[Although you would usually confirm the client's instructions, it is not necessary to do so for the purposes of this assessment.]

My advice

In order for you to be recognised as a refugee by the Home Office, you must show that you have a well-founded fear of persecution for one of the five reasons mentioned in the Refugee Convention: race, religion, nationality, political opinion or membership of a particular social group.

It is your responsibility to show that, because of your own circumstances and the conditions in Sudan, there is a real risk that you personally would be persecuted if you had to return. Persecution is treatment which is serious enough to be a severe violation of your human rights. This includes things like killing, torture, acts of violence and prosecution which discriminates against you or punishes you disproportionately.

You need to show that you could be persecuted either by state officials (such as police officers or soldiers) or by individuals who do not work for the state (such as unofficial militias or political activists). If the persecutors do not work for the state you must prove that the state is unable or unwilling to protect you via an effective legal system. You must also prove that you could not relocate to another part of Sudan where you would be safe or that it would be unreasonable to expect you to internally relocate.

The law which is followed by the Home Office is found in the Refugee (Qualification) Regulations 2006 and Part 11 of the immigration rules – para 339O deals with internal relocation.

In your case, the Home Office will follow the ‘country guidance’ decision of the specialist judges in the Upper Tribunal. In the case of IM and AI (Risks - membership of Beja Tribe, Beja Congress and JEM) Sudan CG [2016] UKUT 188 (IAC) the judges decided that a person would be at risk if they are likely to be perceived as a potential threat to the extent that they will be targeted by the authorities on return to Khartoum. Detention and questioning by the authorities for a short period of time would not, in itself, be enough to put you at risk.

We must show that you would be persecuted either because of the political opinions which the Sudanese authorities believe you to hold (even though you do not) or because you are related to your brother. In other words, you are part of the social group which is your family. There is a UK court judgment which deals with this (K and Fornah [2006] UKHL 46).

The fact that you have been threatened with torture should strengthen your case because if we can show that you have suffered persecution or serious harm or direct threats of those things in the past, that will provide a serious indication that you have a well founded fear of persecution in the future (para 339K of the immigration rules).

Because a real risk of future persecution is the key thing we must prove, we must think about the political changes which have taken place in Sudan since you left and show that there has not been such a change in the circumstances inside the country that you would no longer be at risk of persecution.

Conclusion

I hope I have been able to explain clearly what we must prove in your case. We now need to help you explain your own history in your own words and get any available documents about you which can help to show the Home Office that you are telling the truth. At the same time we will use court judgments and specialist reports from the Home Office and human rights organisations which show that people in your situation face a real risk of persecution.

I will be in contact shortly. In the meantime, if you have any questions, please contact me.

Yours sincerely,

An Adviser
