

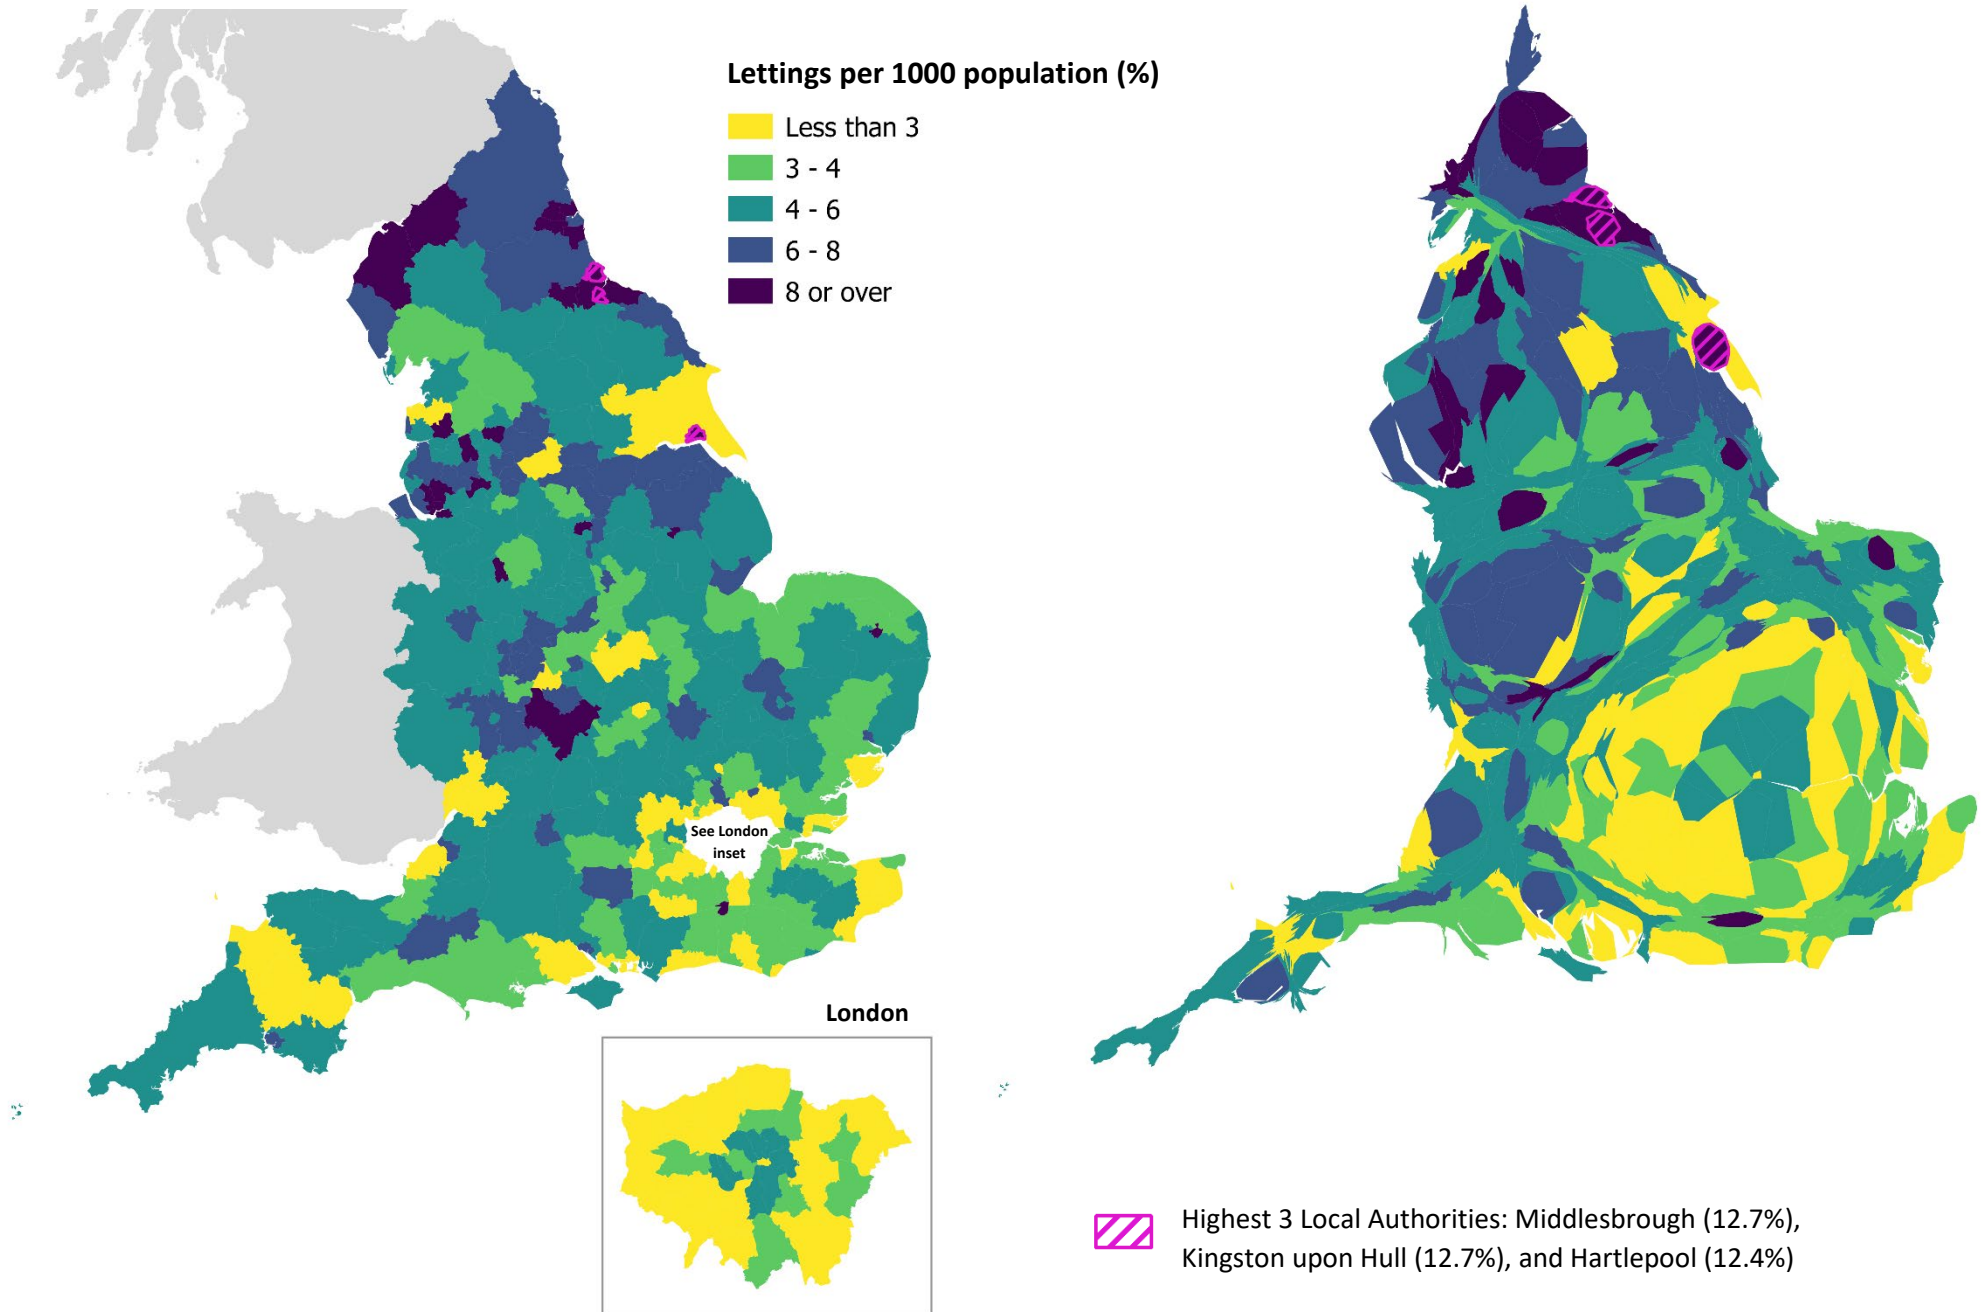

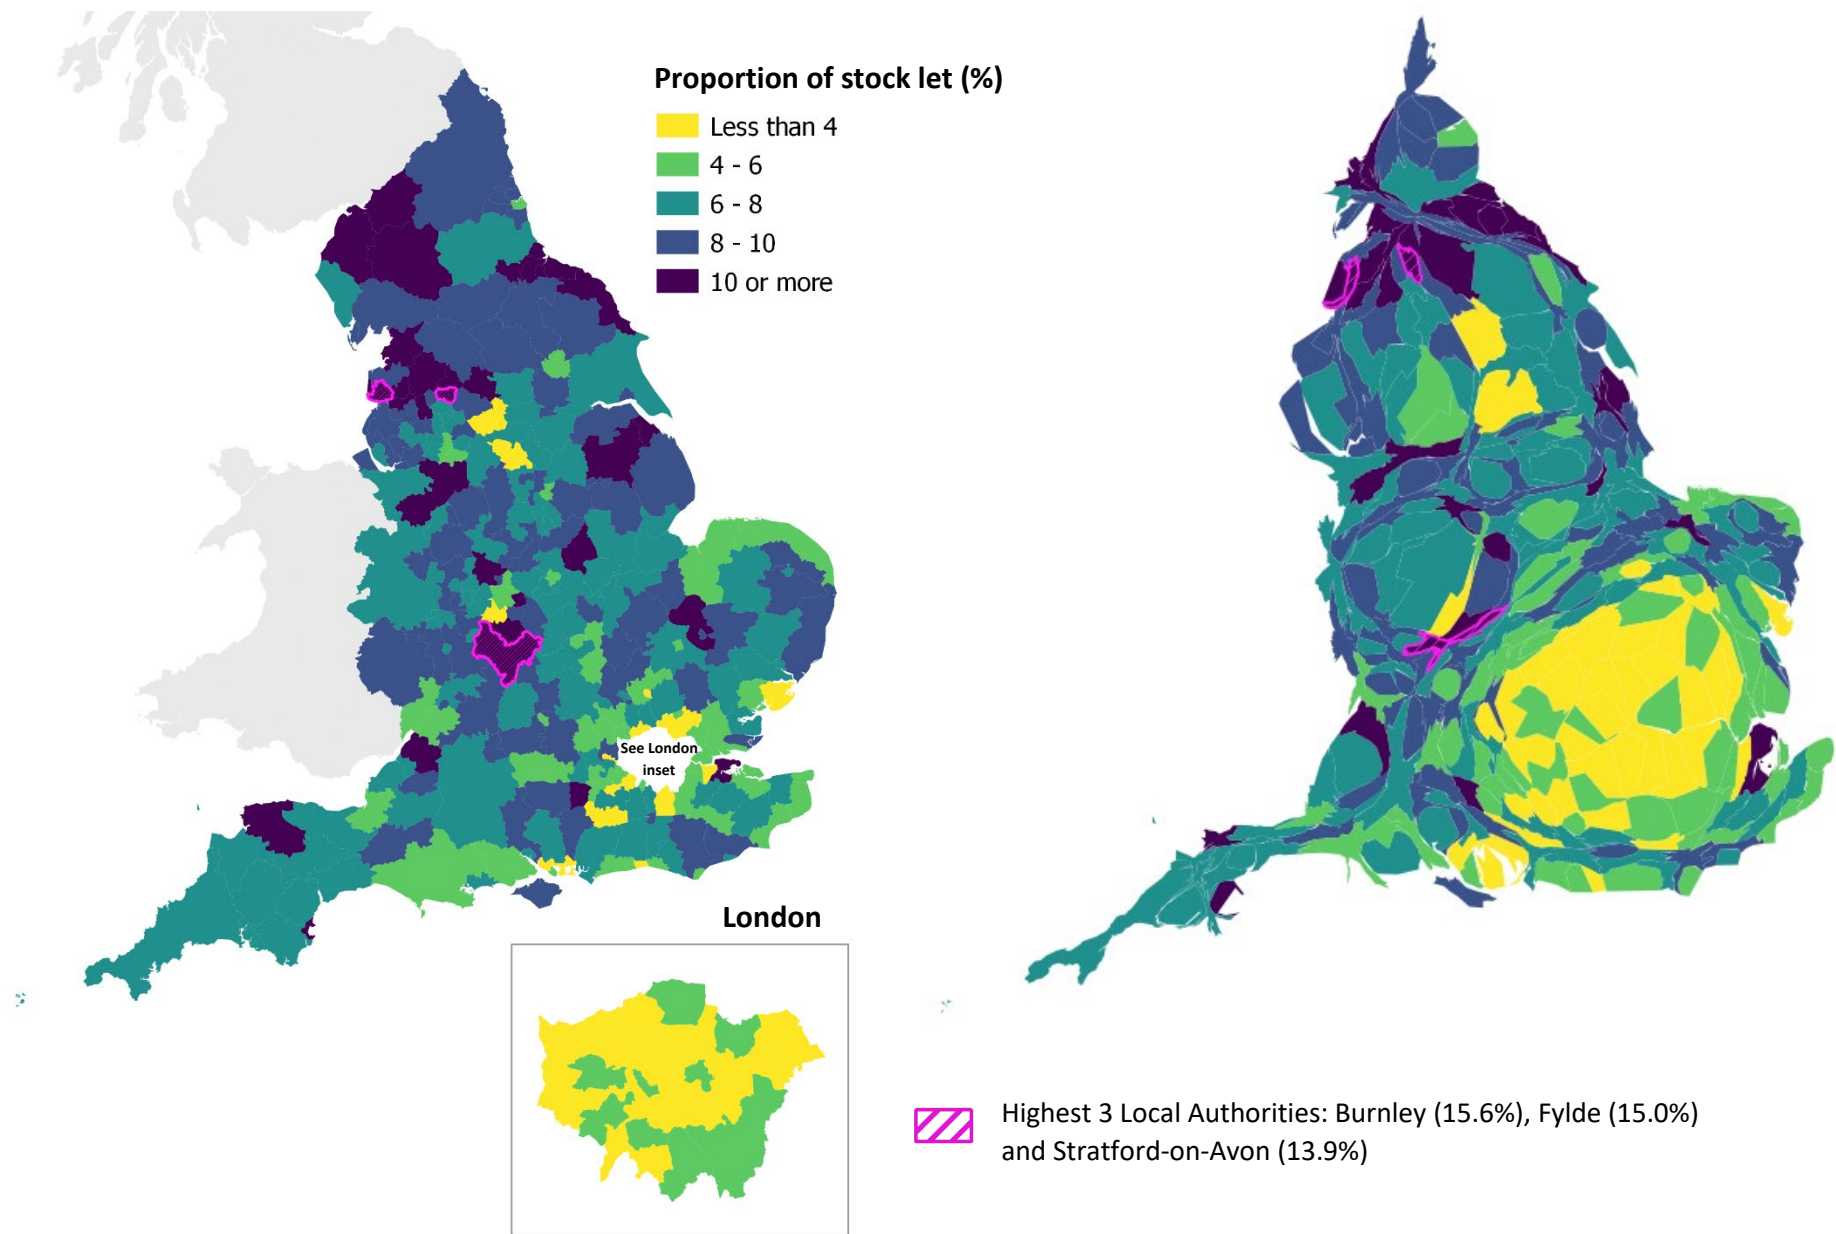

Map 1 - The North and the Midlands had the highest proportion of new social lettings per population in 2019/2020 (areas on the right-hand map are proportionate to estimated population)

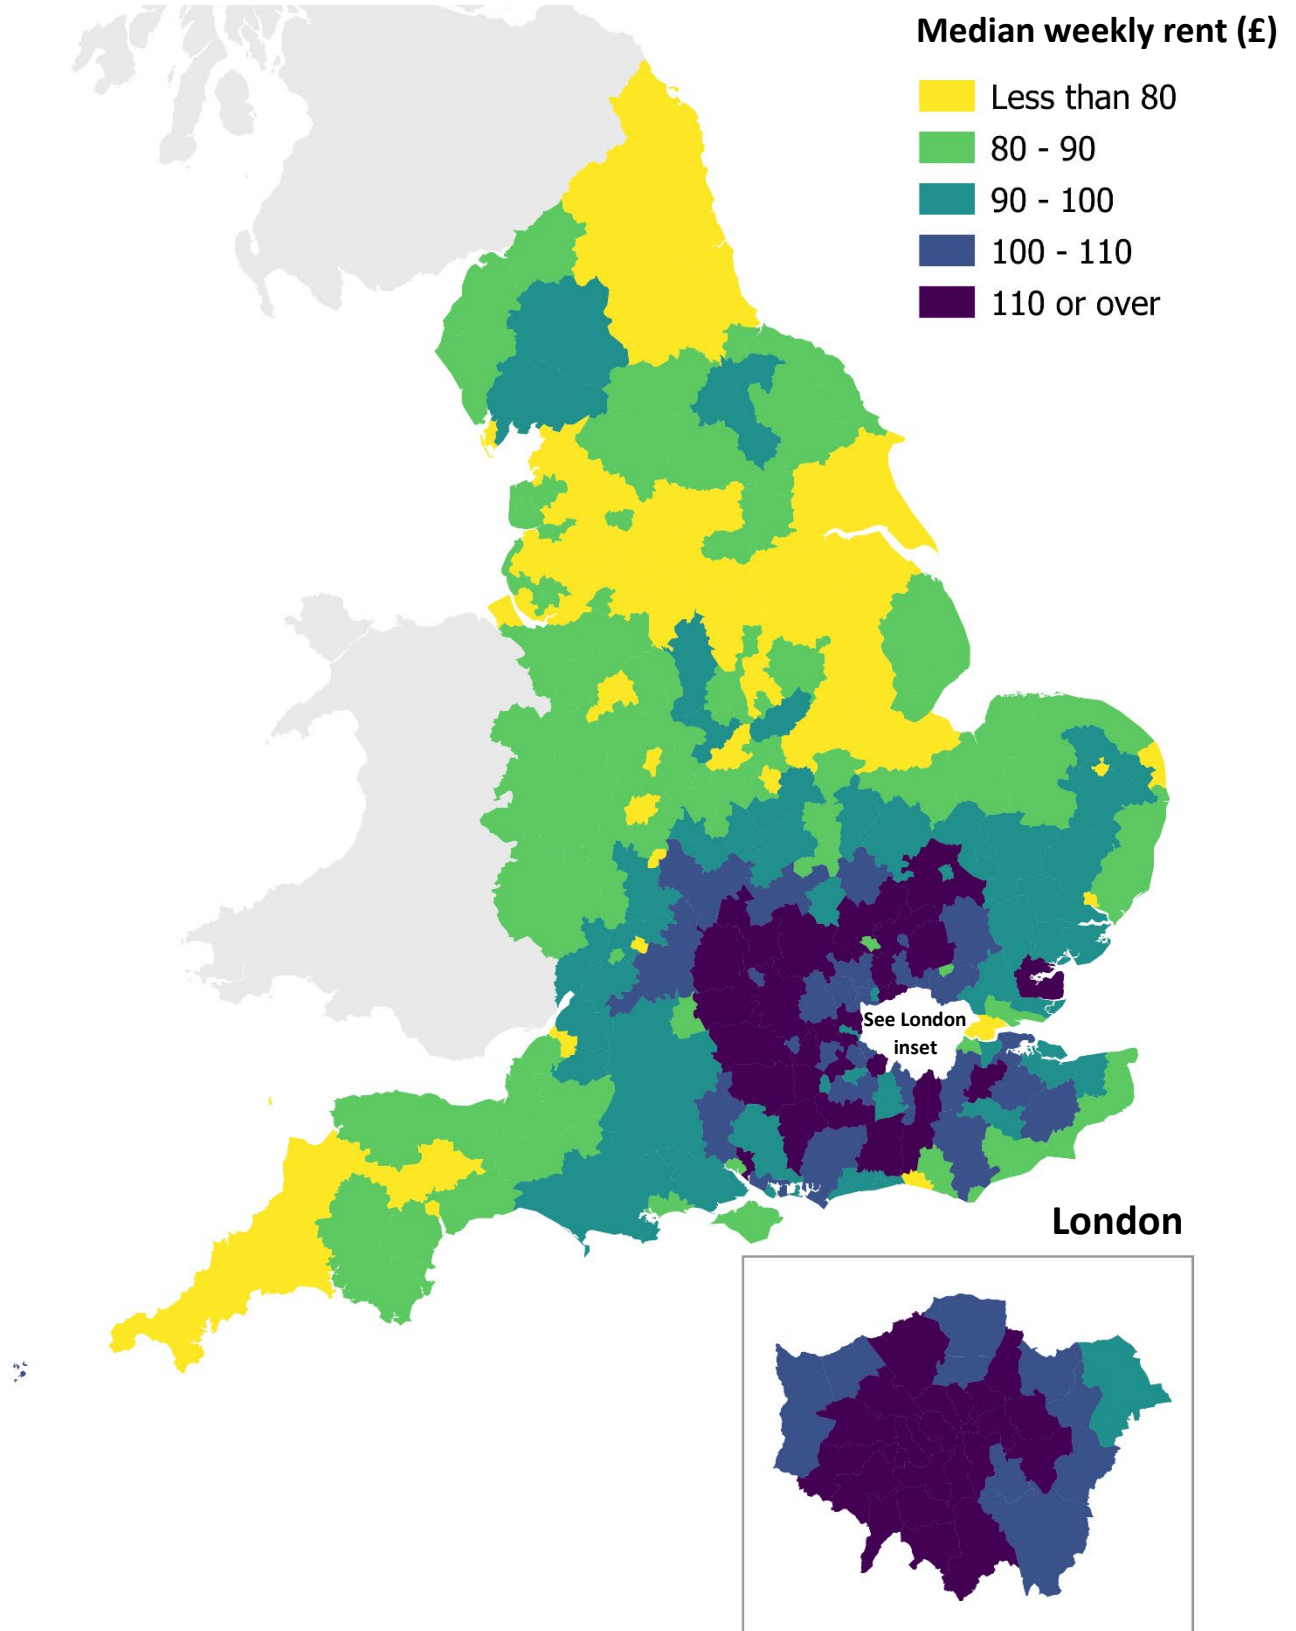

Map 2 – London was the least active area in England, with the smallest proportion of stock newly let in 2019/20 (areas on the right-hand map are proportionate to estimated population)

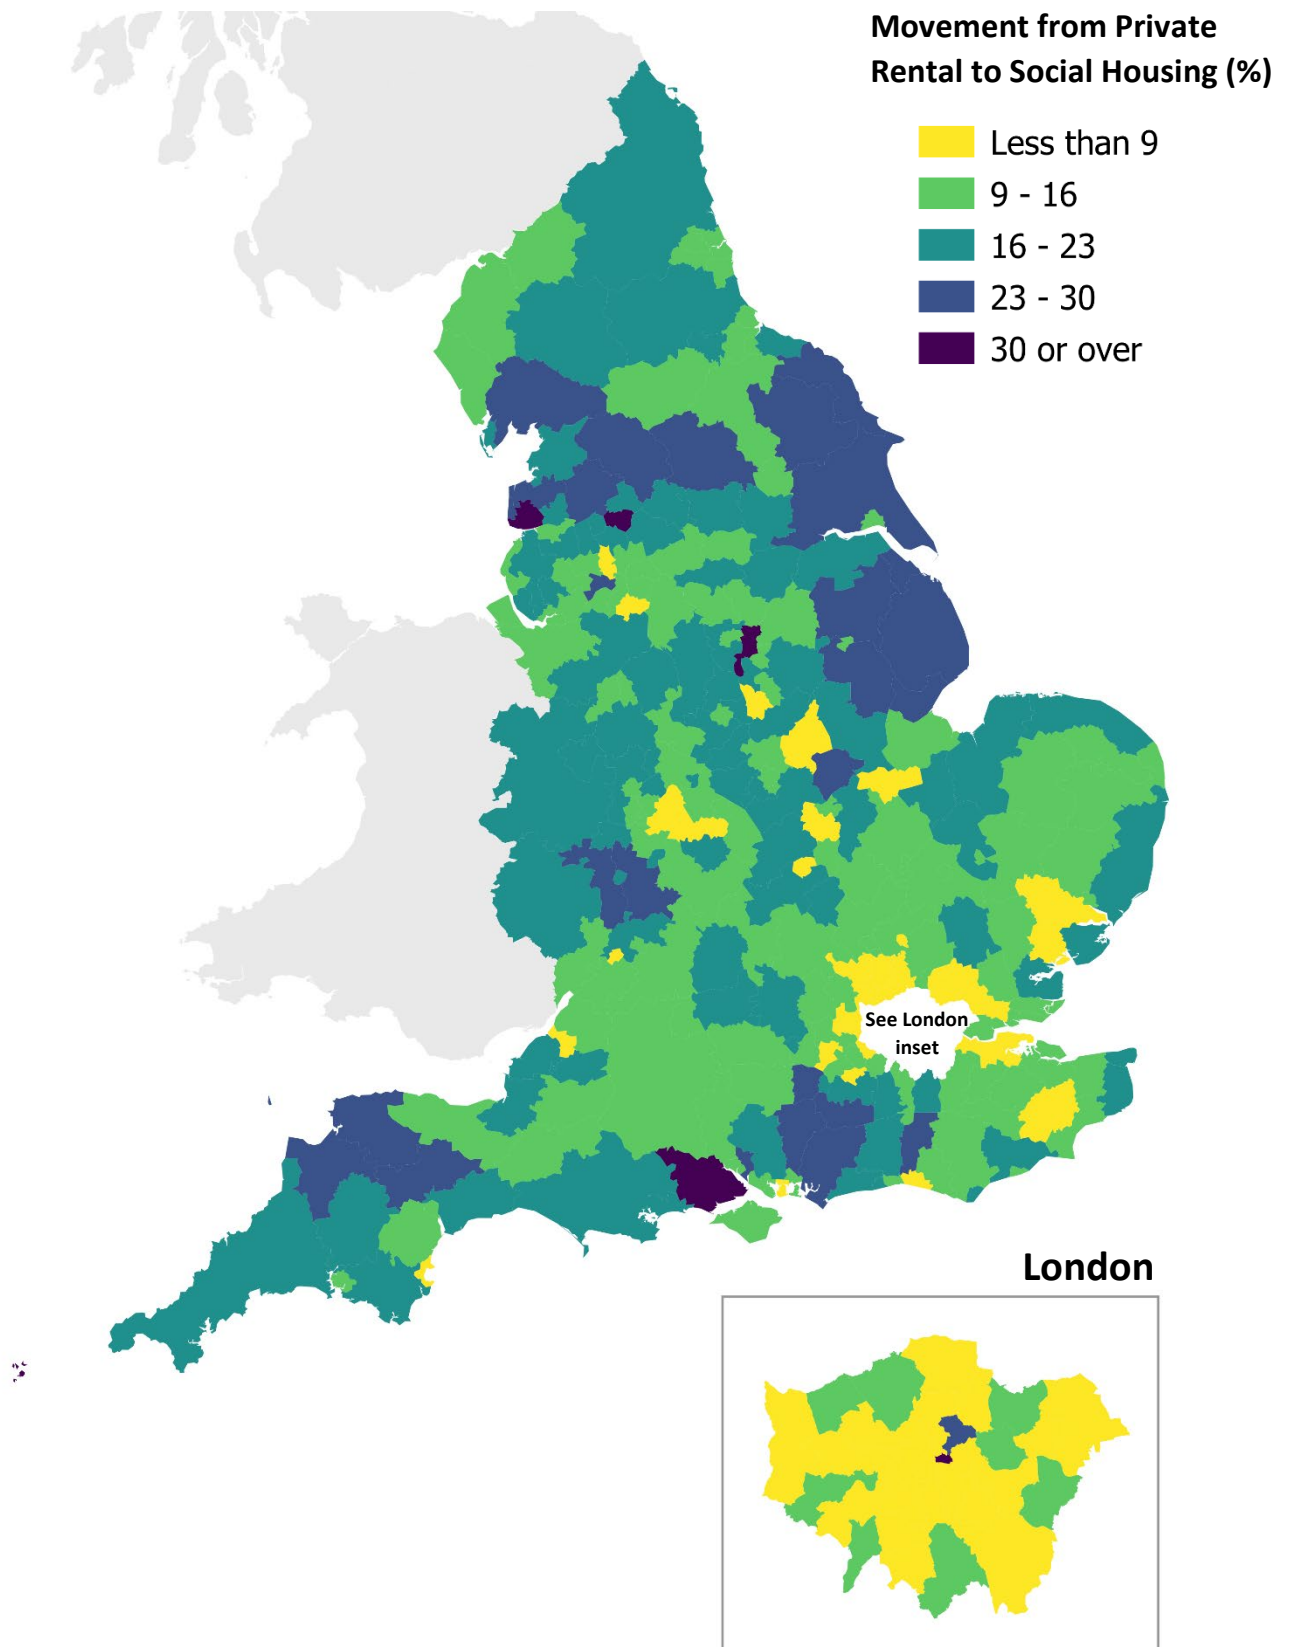

Map 3

Median weekly rents for new social lettings were highest in London and surrounding areas in 2019/20

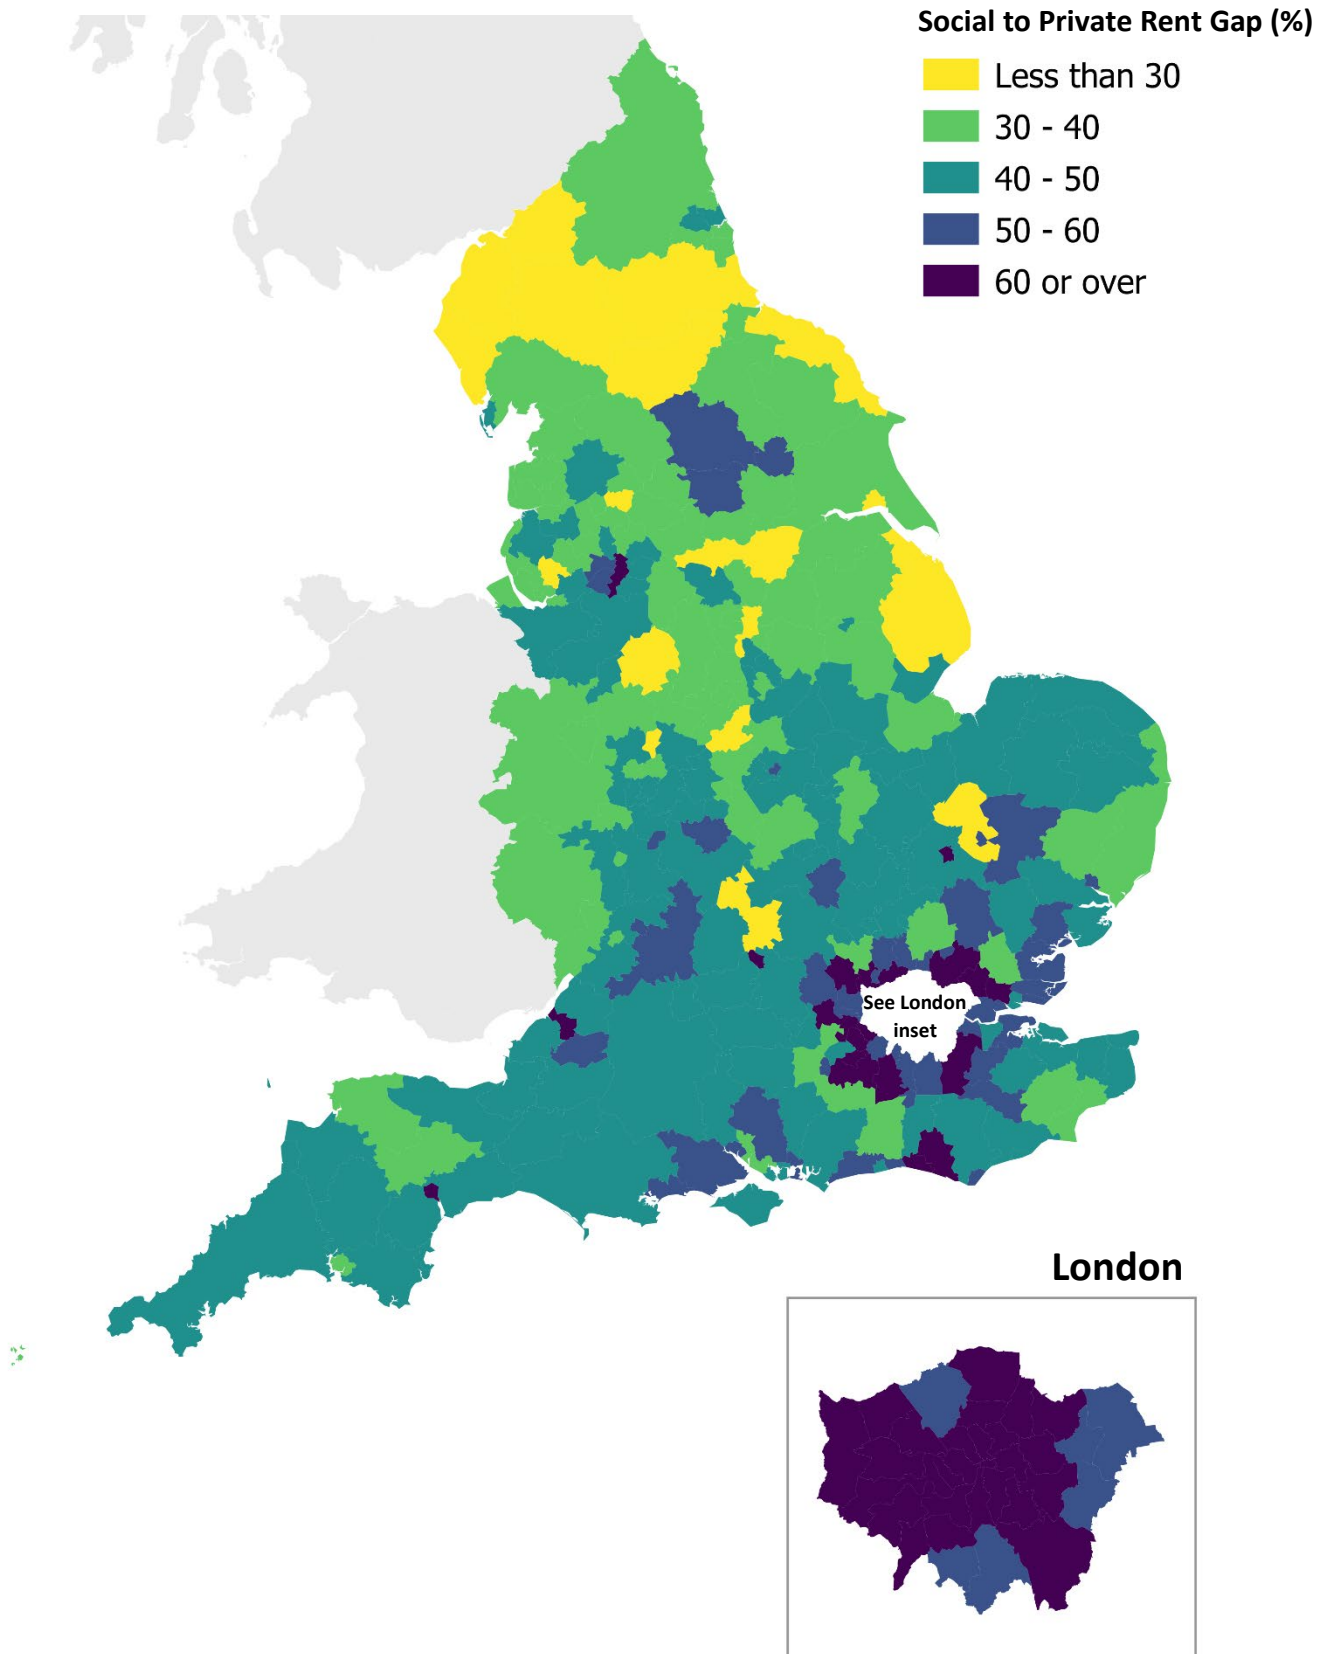

Map 4

The proportion of households moving from the private rental sector to social housing in 2019/20 was smaller in London and surrounding areas, compared to the rest of England

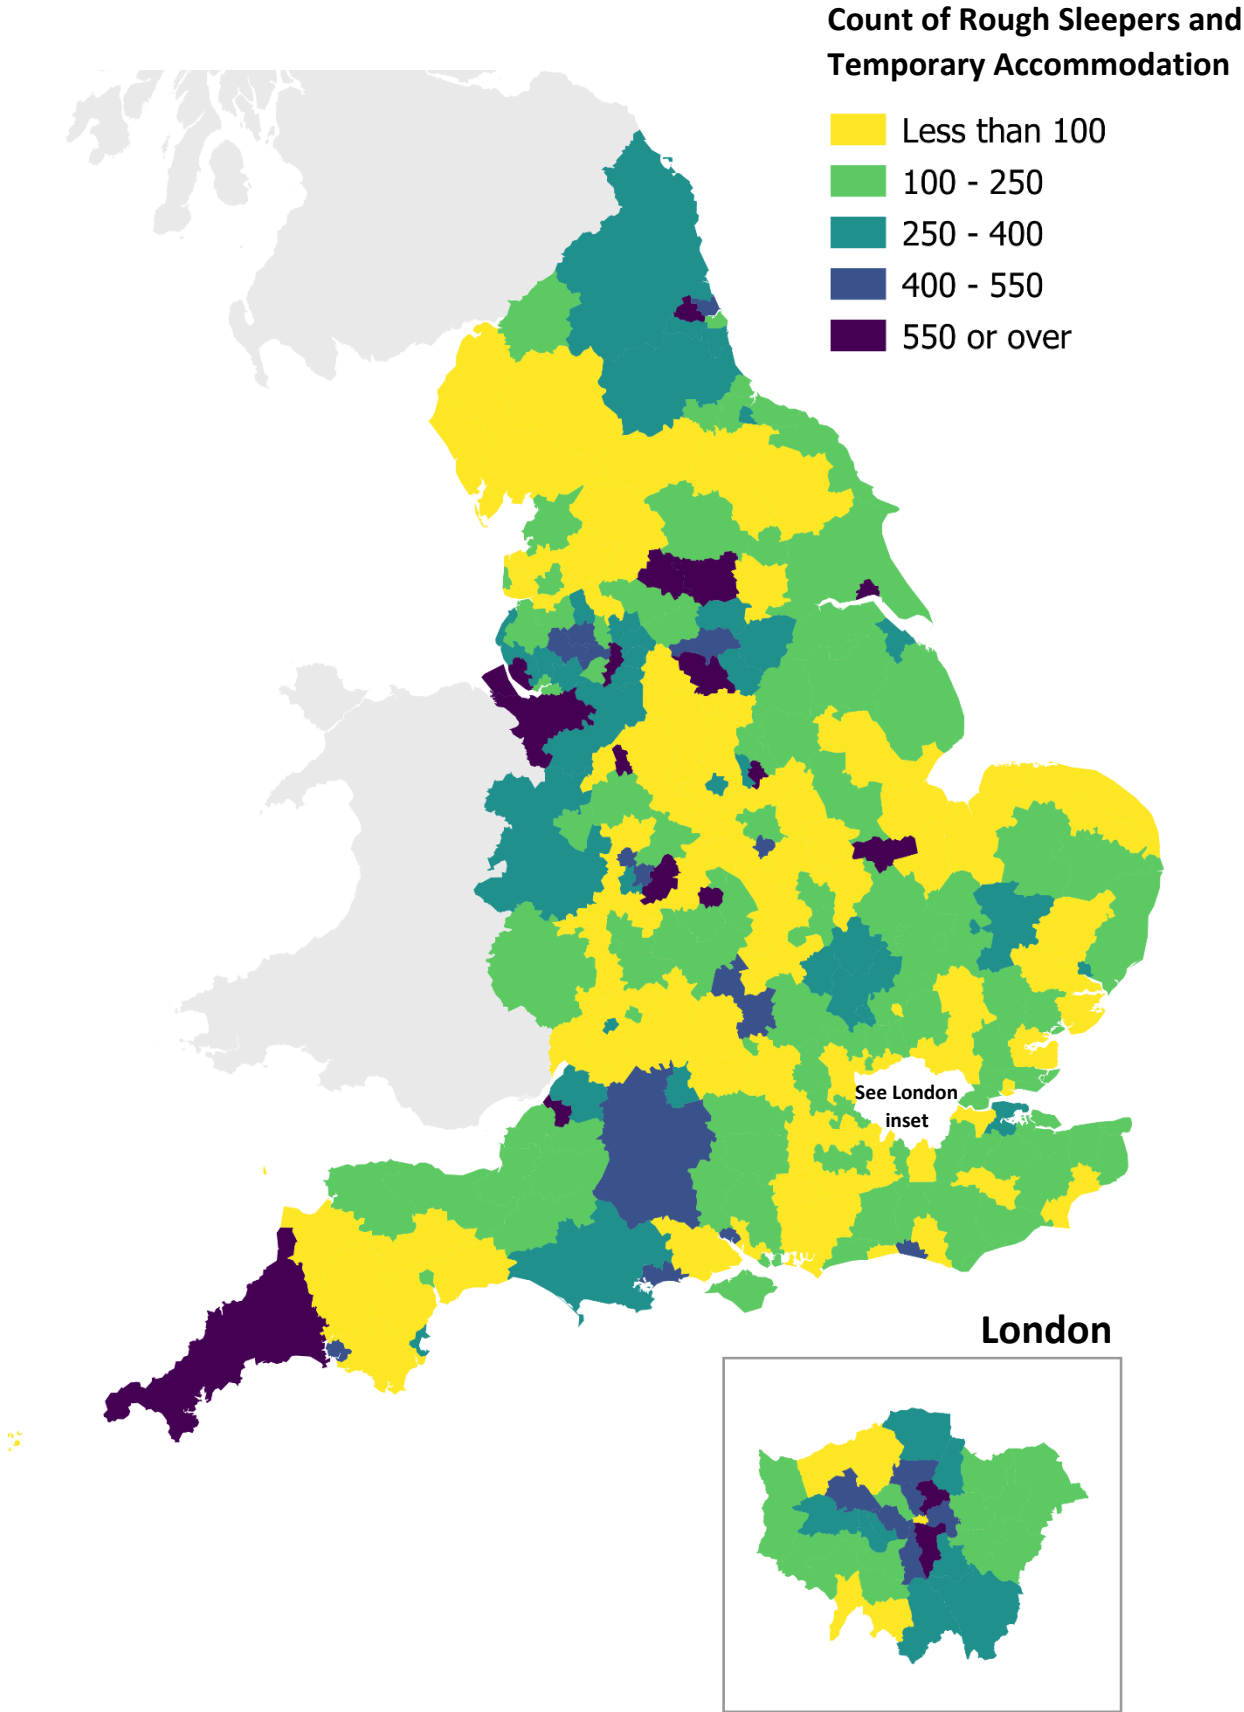

Map 5

The highest gap between weekly social and private rent for new lettings in 2019/20 was in London, reducing further away from London

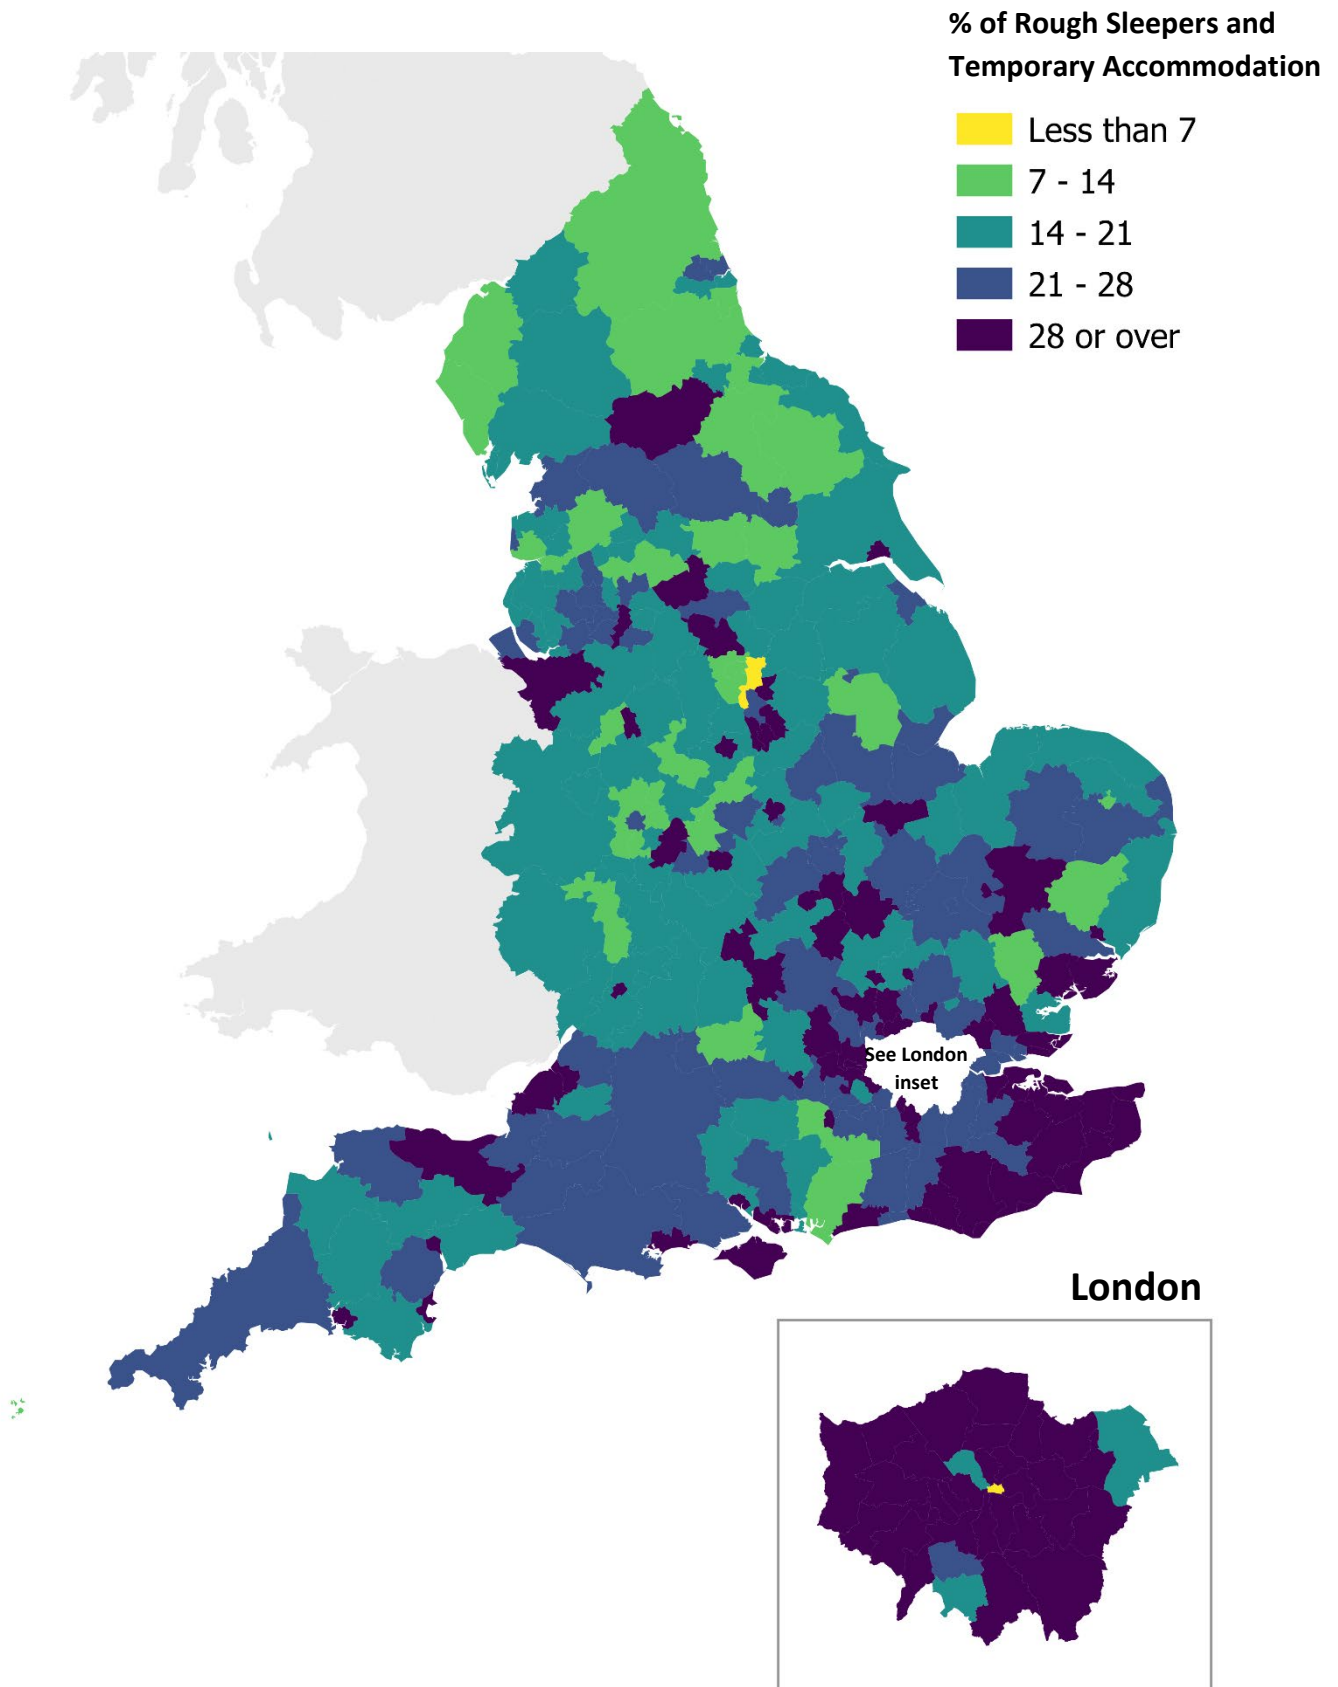

Map 6

Most new social lettings in 2019/20 to tenants previously sleeping rough or in temporary accommodation were in urban areas

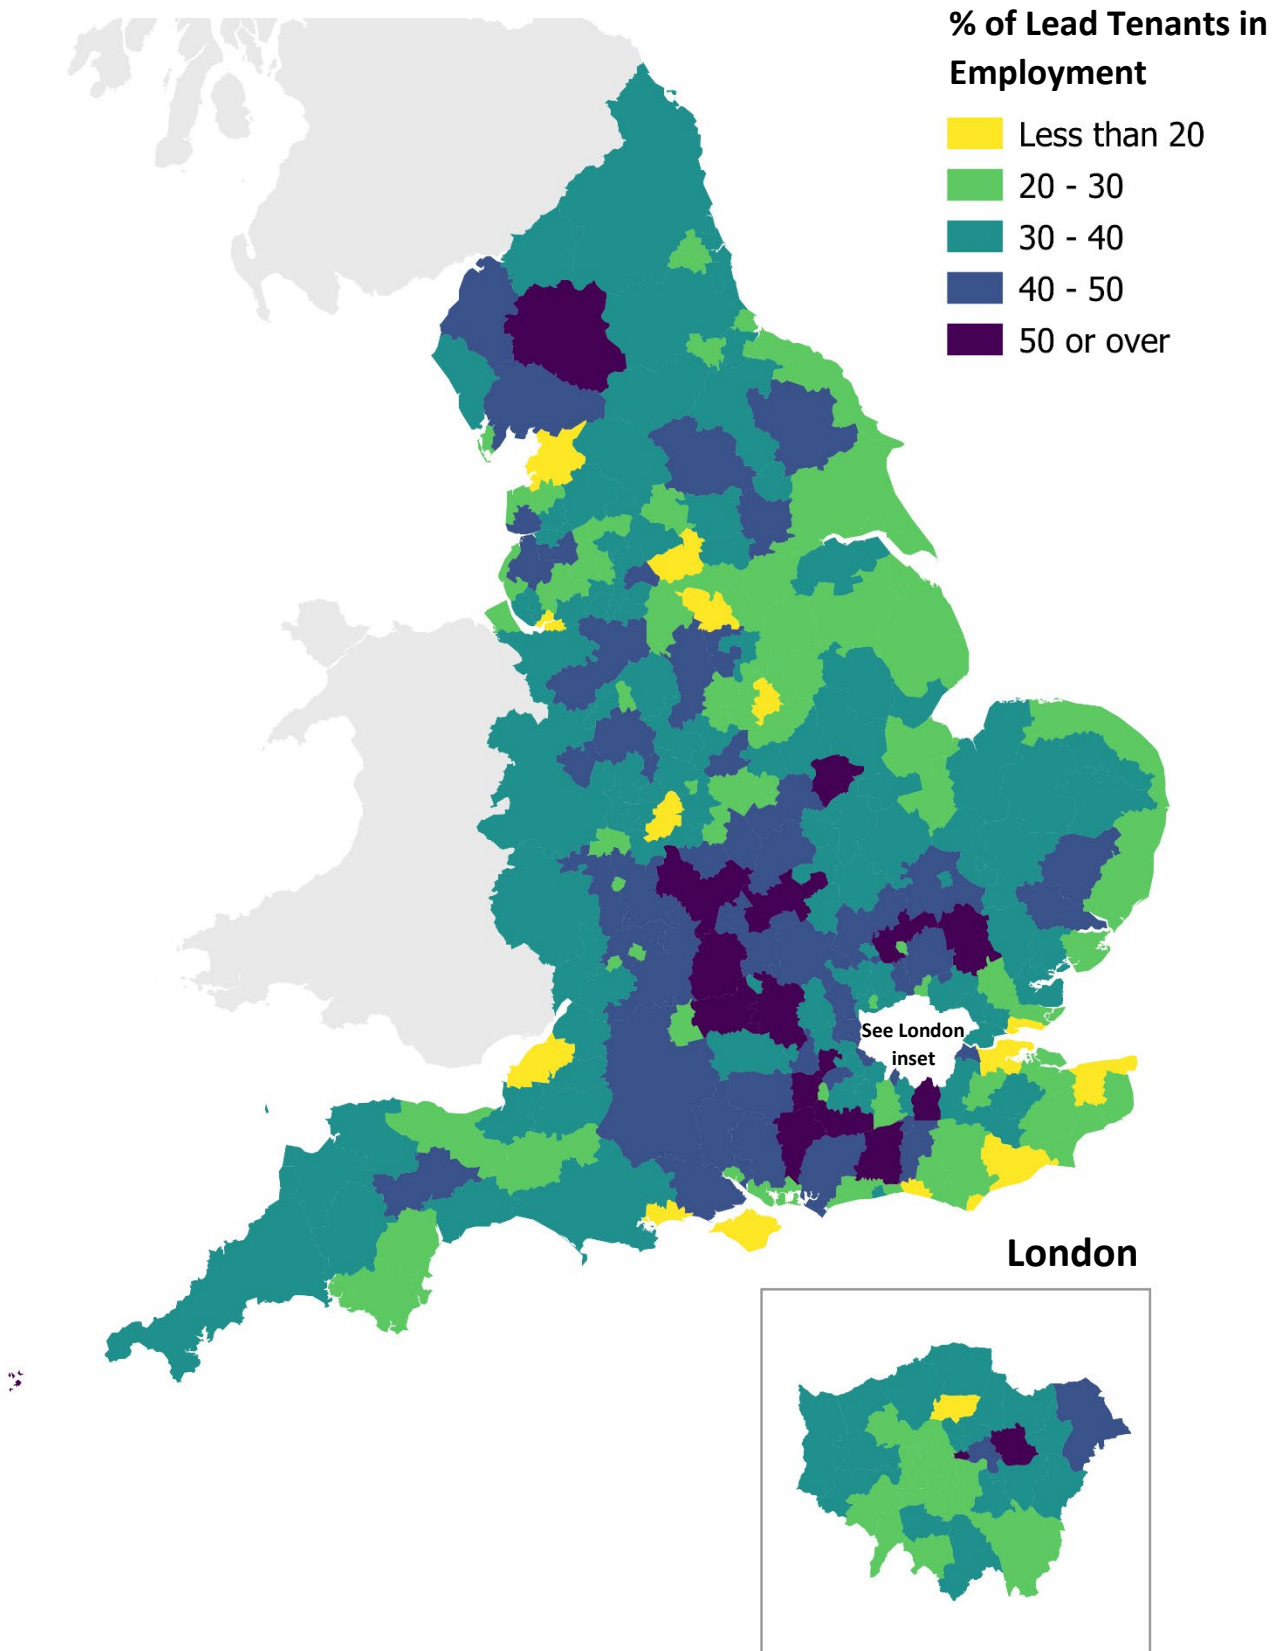

Map 7

Major urban areas in 2019/20 had the highest proportion of new social lettings to tenants previously sleeping rough or in temporary accommodation - this reduces towards the North of England

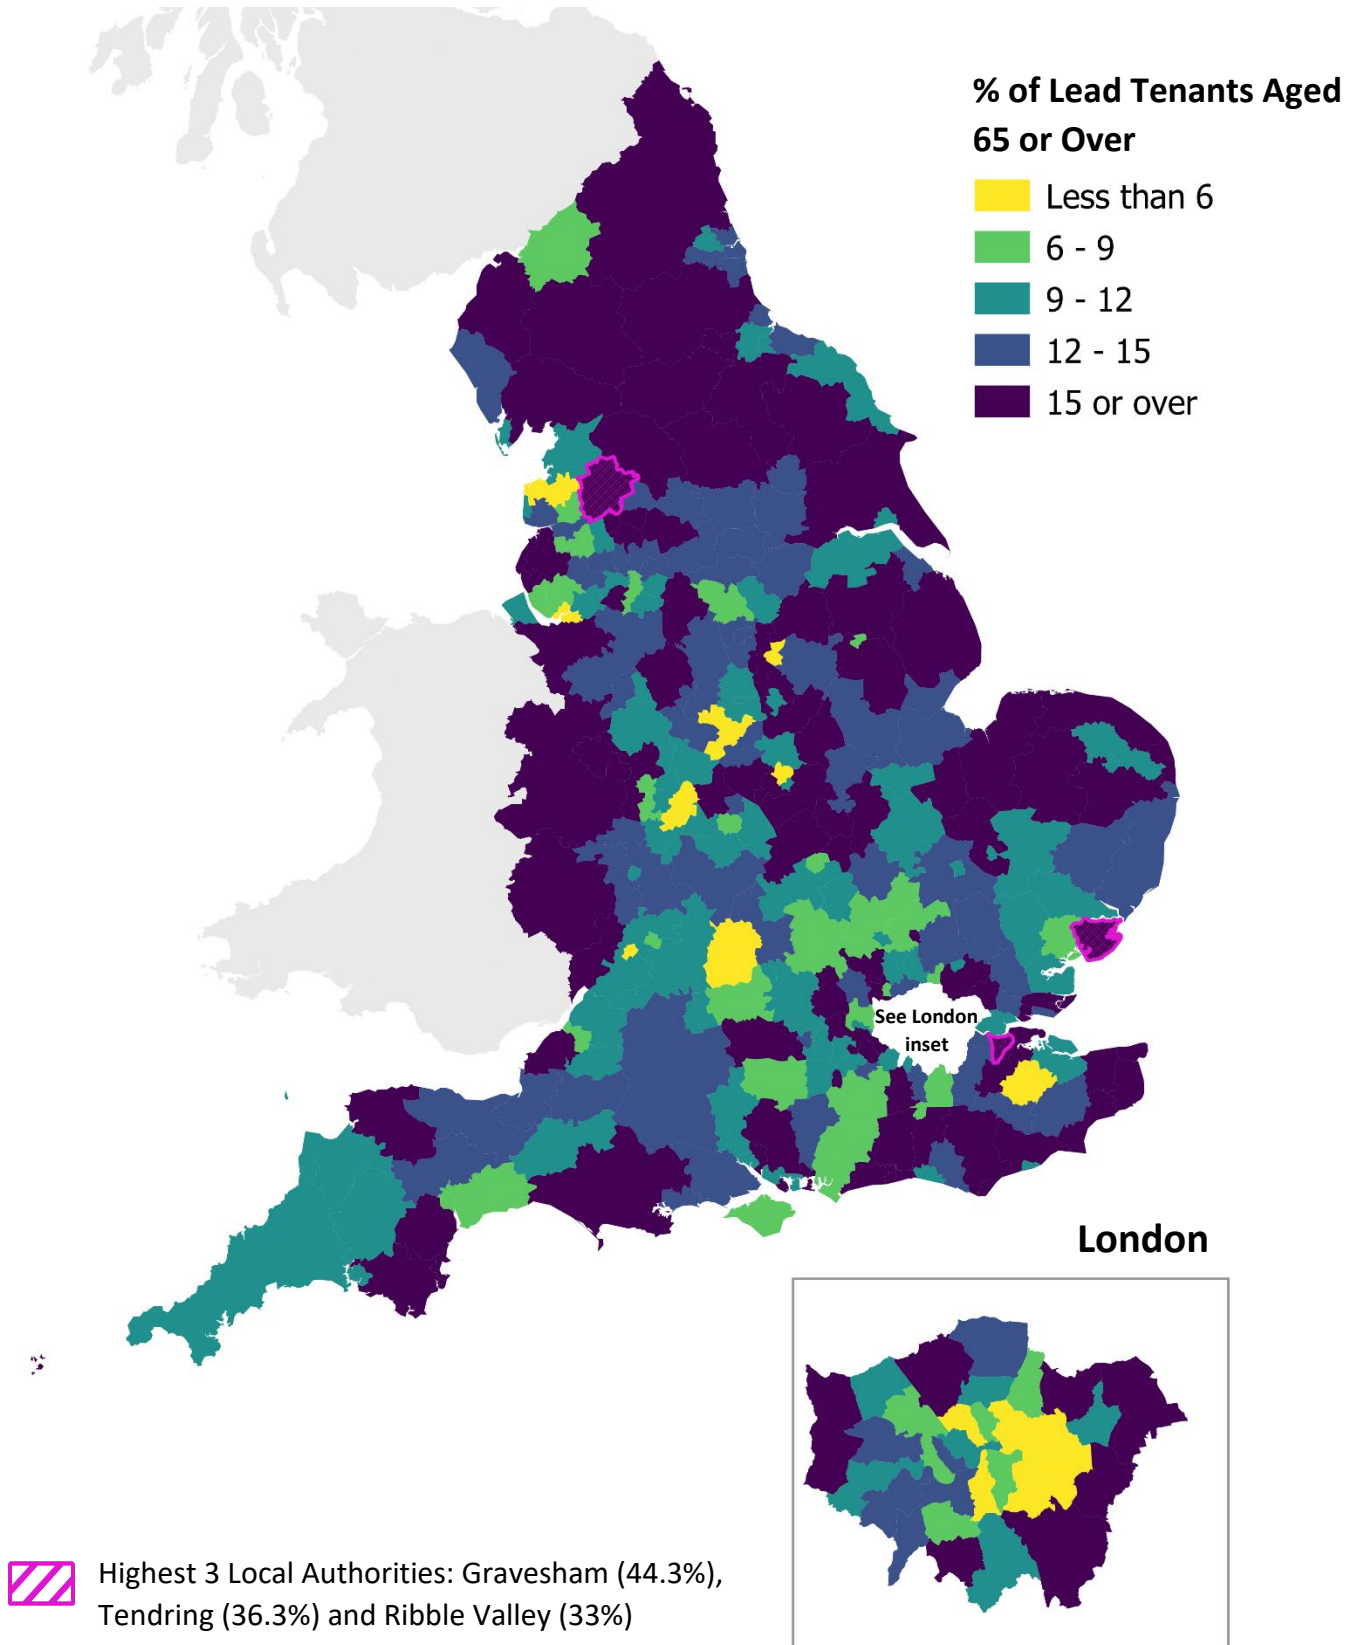

Map 8

The proportion of new social lettings to lead tenants in employment was lowest in coastal areas of England in 2019/20

Map 9

New social lettings to tenants in rural and coastal areas of England were most likely to have lead tenants aged 65 or over in 2019/20

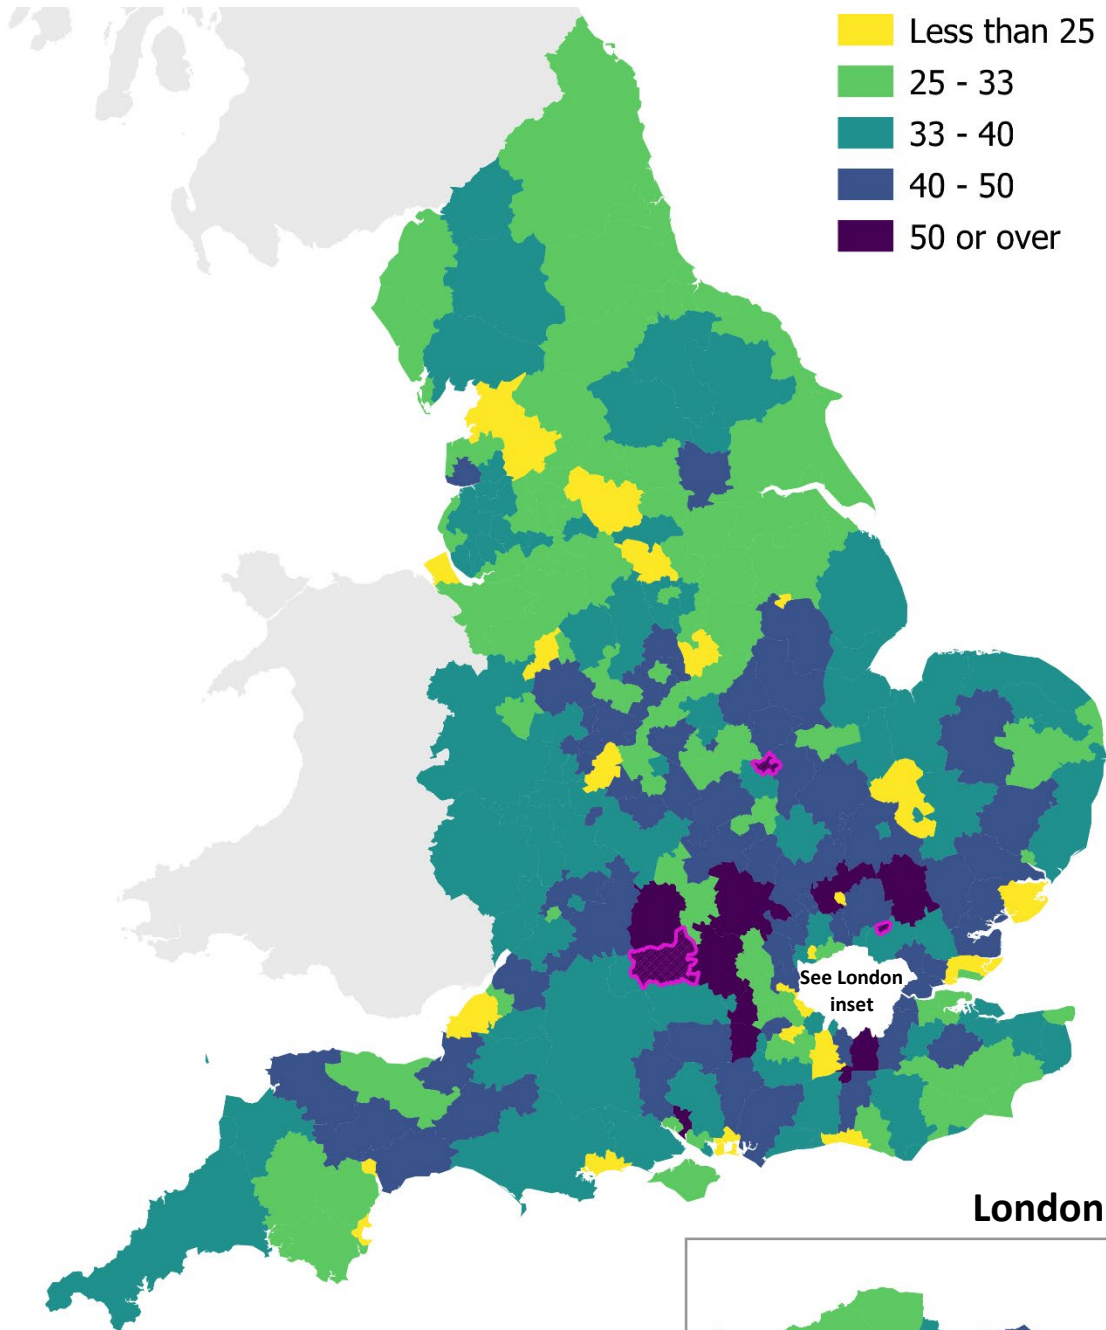

Map 10

Southern areas outside of London had the highest proportion of new social lettings to households containing children in 2019/20

% of Households Containing Children

- Less than 25
- 25 - 33
- 33 - 40
- 40 - 50
- 50 or over

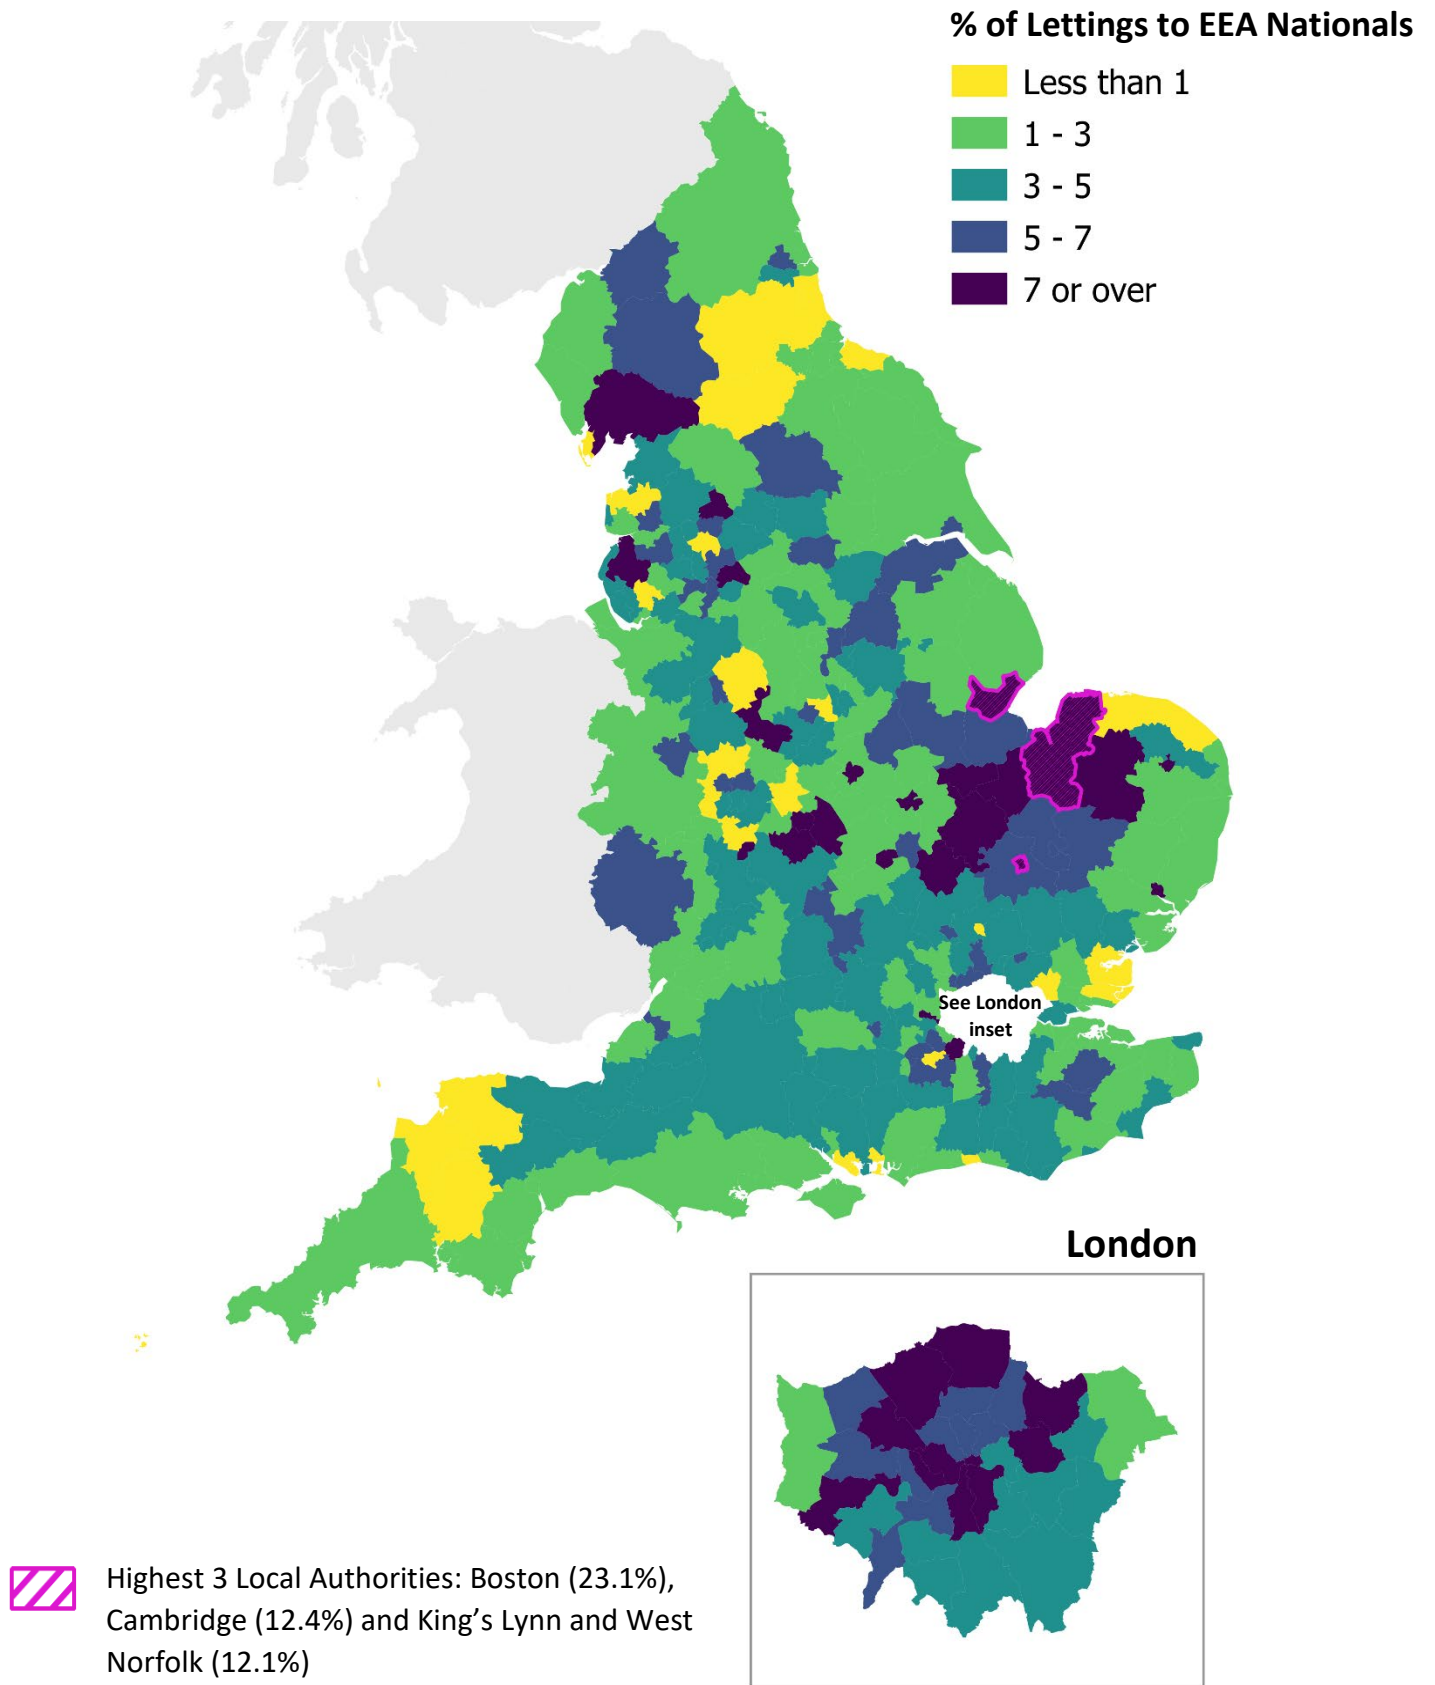

London

 Highest 3 Local Authorities: Harlow (61.5%), Vale of White Horse (59.1%) and Corby (57.4%)

Map 11

London and the Midlands had the highest proportion of new social lettings to European Economic Area (EEA) nationals in 2019/20

Map 12

The proportion of household income spent on rent in new social housing lettings in 2019/20 was highest in London and the surrounding areas

