Dear Sir/Madam,

I am writing again to state that all eye sores like solar panel parks and substations should be sited along motorways and railway tracks.

Also every new industrial unit should have their entire roofs fitted with them and all new large farm buildings and office blocks.

Why or how the powers that be, think that prime farmland is the best option, beggars belief.

Of course, the obvious reason is money, it's cheaper! There is already a power station nearby.

Taking the easy option isn't always the right option.

Everyone has to make a profit, understandable, but how much and at what cost to everything close to this project and others similar to it and the wider environment.

Regards,

Genevieve Holmes, [REDACTED]
