Standards
in Public Life

Annual Report
2024 – 2025

Honesty | Objectivity | Openness | Selflessness | Integrity | Accountability | Leadership

THE SEVEN PRINCIPLES OF PUBLIC LIFE

The Seven Principles of Public Life apply to anyone who works as a public office holder. This includes all those who are elected or appointed to public office, nationally or locally, and all people appointed to work in the public sector. The Principles also apply to all those in the private sector delivering public services.

HONESTY

Holders of public office should be truthful.

OBJECTIVITY

Holders of public office must act and take decisions impartially, fairly and on merit, using the best evidence and without discrimination or bias.

OPENNESS

Holders of public office should act and take decisions in an open and transparent manner. Information should not be withheld from the public unless there are clear and lawful reasons for so doing.

SELFLESSNESS

INTEGRITY

Holders of public office must avoid placing themselves under any obligation to people or organisations that might try inappropriately to influence them in their work. They should not act or take decisions in order to gain financial or other material benefits for themselves, their family, or their friends. They must declare and resolve any interests and relationships.

ACCOUNTABILITY

Holders of public office are accountable to the public for their decisions and actions and must submit themselves to the scrutiny necessary to ensure this.

LEADERSHIP

Holders of public office should exhibit these principles in their own behaviour and treat others with respect. They should actively promote and robustly support the principles and challenge poor behaviour wherever it occurs.

The Seven Principles were established in the Committee's First Report in 1995; some of the accompanying descriptors were revised following a review in the 14th Report, Standards Matter, published January 2013, and in the 23rd Report, Upholding Standards in Public Life, published November 2021.

FOREWORD BY THE CHAIR

I am pleased to present the Committee on Standards in Public Life's Annual Report for 2024/25, a year that marked the 30th anniversary of Lord Nolan's Principles of Public Life - Integrity, Objectivity, Accountability, Selflessness, Openness, Honesty, and Leadership.

These common values are the bedrock of standards and ethics for everyone in the public sector – outlining the conduct expected of Ministers, civil servants, MPs and local government councillors as well as police officers, nurses and companies delivering public services. But the work of maintaining these high standards is never done; it requires constant vigilance. Lord Nolan was clear that codes of conduct and independent scrutiny - now well established - must also be supported by education and guidance.

To mark the 30th anniversary, the Committee carried out a range of activities aimed at embedding the Principles more deeply in public sector culture, including the development of ethical case studies to prompt discussion of public sector values. We have been testing these with schools, university students and public sector officials and will be making them available shortly as a public resource.

In March, we published our major report on 'Recognising and Responding to Early Warning Signs in Public Sector Bodies', a piece of work prompted by the themes arising from several major public inquiries including Grenfell, Infected Blood, the Horizon IT and others. Common organisational failings were clear for all to see - concerns raised by staff or the public but not acted upon, defensive cultures, and missed opportunities to prevent harm. Our report provides public sector bodies with 20 points of reflection to help them put in place the processes needed to recognise early signs of failure and build a cultural willingness to address problems and learn from them. We want to help achieve better outcomes for the public by mitigating the risk of harm, saving taxpayer's money and leading to the more effective delivery of public services. We have been pleased by the positive response to this work, including extensive engagement with departments, public bodies and a letter of recognition from the Prime Minister. We will continue to promote this work throughout the year ahead.

Beyond this, the Committee has monitored developments and contributed on a number of standards issues including responding to a range of government consultations and hosting roundtables on local government standards and artificial intelligence. We have also continued to make the case for strengthening the regulation of election finance and welcome the government's intention to act on some of the Committee's 2021 recommendations in this area. I would like to thank all those who have contributed to our work this year, either by giving evidence to us, meeting with us or taking part in a roundtable – your input and expertise is invaluable.

The Committee has also taken part in discussions about the future shape of UK standards regulation, including meeting with ministers and officials, and through events hosted by the Institute for Government and others. We await with interest developments around the government's proposed Ethics and Integrity Commission and a statutory Duty of Candour. It is important to reflect on how the landscape has changed - and what needs to endure - to uphold high standards in the context of major societal changes.

I am deeply grateful to our members for their knowledge and experience and contributions, and to our small secretariat for their support. I would also like to thank Baroness (Simone) Finn for her valuable contributions to the Committee's work and welcome Councillor Ruth Dombey OBE who joined the Committee this year.

It is notable – looking back over its 30-year history - that many of the structures supporting today's ethical framework in public life stem from this Committee's recommendations. We remain committed to carrying that legacy forward - through independent, evidence-based work and continuing to promote a culture of integrity in public life.

THE COMMITTEE'S REMIT

The Committee is an independent, advisory non-departmental public body sponsored by the Cabinet Office, which advises the Prime Minister on arrangements for upholding ethical standards across the whole of public life in England. The Committee does that by undertaking independent reviews and producing evidence-based reports.

The Committee was established as a standing committee in October 1994, by the then Prime Minister, The Rt Hon Sir John Major KG CH, with the following terms of reference:

“To examine current concerns about standards of conduct of all holders of public office, including arrangements relating to financial and commercial activities, and make recommendations as to any changes in present arrangements which might be required to ensure the highest standards of propriety in public life.”

The remit of the Committee excludes investigation of allegations of misconduct. We are not a regulator and cannot investigate individual complaints.

On 12 November 1997, the terms of reference were extended by the then Prime Minister:

“To review issues in relation to the funding of political parties, and to make recommendations as to any changes in present arrangements.”

The terms of reference were clarified following the Triennial Review of the Committee in 2013.

The then Minister for the Cabinet Office confirmed that the Committee “should not inquire into matters relating to the devolved legislatures and governments except with the agreement of those bodies”, and that “the government understands the Committee’s remit to examine “standards of conduct of all holders of public office” as encompassing all those involved in the delivery of public services, not solely those appointed or elected to public office.”

THE COMMITTEE'S ROLE AND HOW IT GOES ABOUT ITS WORK

The Committee advises the Prime Minister on ethical standards across public life. We conduct broad inquiries, collecting evidence to assess institutions, policies and practices and make recommendations to the Prime Minister where appropriate. We identify areas of concern and undertake impartial, evidence-based reviews, making recommendations to uphold and drive improvement in standards in public life based on evidence received. Our independence from both government and Parliament is key.

The Committee may decide to conduct inquiries into areas of current concern about standards in public life; revisit areas to see if and how our recommendations have been put into effect; and can also look ahead to emerging issues relating to public standards. We promote the Principles of Public Life, which outline the ethical standards those working in the public sector are expected to adhere to. The Principles apply to all public office holders and to private and voluntary organisations where they are delivering services paid for by public funds.

The Committee is committed to building a strong evidence-base for our reviews and to working with others to ensure that high ethical standards are met and that the Principles of Public Life are understood and embedded across public life.

We make informed contributions to public debates about ethical standards, including through submissions to public consultations and participating in seminars and discussion events. We monitor emerging ethical risks and engage with a wide range of partners on the ethical standards agenda.

The Committee is not a regulator and we have no statutory powers and no remit to investigate individual cases. Our effectiveness depends on our independence, impartiality, and our ability to make powerful arguments for change, which in turn is based on conducting well researched reviews, with a strong evidence base, after wide-ranging consultation. Where possible, we aim to follow-up our reviews with the relevant stakeholders to ensure that our recommendations stand the strongest possible chance of being implemented.

Under its remit since 2013, the Committee cannot inquire into matters relating to devolved legislatures and governments except with their agreement. When the subject of the Committee's reviews impact on reserved areas however, the Committee seeks the views of the devolved administrations as appropriate.

We are part of a complex landscape. There is a wide range of different regulatory bodies involved in investigating, promoting and maintaining standards, based on the Nolan Principles - some of which came about as a result of the Committee's recommendations over the past almost 30 years.

CORE WORK PROGRAMME 2024-2025

Recognising and Responding to Early Warning Signs in Public Sector Bodies

On 25 March 2025, the Committee published Recognising and Responding to Early Warning Signs in Public Sector Bodies, the outcome of our year-long review on how public sector bodies can get better at uncovering and addressing problems within an organisation, before they escalate into a crisis.<sup>2</sup>

Recent reports of public inquiries and other independent reviews have revealed common themes. These include a failure to listen to and act on concerns raised by employees and/or the public, a failure to learn lessons from past mistakes or similar incidents and a failure to identify and share emerging themes that might have alerted the organisation to a developing risk. There is often a failure of the board to have effective oversight of issues and concerns. A common characteristic of bodies responsible for a major failure is an overly defensive organisational culture.

The purpose of the report is to support public sector bodies to put in place the processes needed to recognise the early warning signs of emerging problems and to facilitate a culture where speaking up about concerns and learning from mistakes are seen as a personal duty and are valued by everyone in the organisation. Our aspiration is better outcomes for the public by mitigating the risk of harm, saving taxpayers' money and leading to the more effective delivery of public services.

The report includes examples of how organisations have sought to identify and respond to the early warning signs of emerging problems and identifies 20 points for reflection which we hope will assist leaders to consider whether improvements can be made to their organisation's processes and culture, and which employees can use to encourage their leaders to focus on these important areas.

The Chair wrote an open letter to public sector leaders drawing attention to the report and sharing the points for reflection.<sup>3</sup>

We are now focused on talking to organisations about the report to maximise its impact.

30th Anniversary of the Principles of Public Life

2025 marks the 30th anniversary of the Seven Principles of Public Life. They were set out in the Committee's first report of 1995, which Lord Nolan, first Chair of the Committee, described as 'a restatement of the general principles of conduct which underpin public life' and intended 'for the benefit of all who serve the public in any way'.

To mark the 30th anniversary of the Committee's work and the Nolan Principles, we have held a number of events and published a series of blogs and papers throughout the year. We have:

- October 2024: Published a paper and accompanying blog by Professor Mark Philp, Chair of the Committee's Research Advisory Board, reflecting on the pertinence of the Nolan Principles in setting out the understanding between those in public office and the public.<sup>4 5</sup>
- November 2024: Held a panel discussion with the Institute for Government (IfG) on what the future holds for standards in public life.<sup>6</sup>
- 2025: Held a number of sessions with students at Cambridge and Sheffield Universities on the Principles of Public Life; and with academics on the ethical implications of AI, and the future challenges for standards in public life.
- 2025: Published a series of blogs by standards regulators on the work of standards bodies in England.
- June 2025: Participated in the IfG's conference 'The Nolan Principles at 30: What does the future hold for standards in public life?' where our Chair, Doug Chalmers, discussed how ethical standards can be upheld in the future. This day-long conference, with Sir John Major as a keynote speaker, convened a number of experts and commentators across the standards landscape to share their views.

RECENT PREVIOUS REPORTS: UPDATES AND GOVERNMENT RESPONSES

Upholding Standards In Public Life, 2021

The Committee published Upholding Standards in Public Life in November 2021.<sup>7</sup> The report included recommendations for reforming: the Ministerial Code and the Independent Adviser; ACOBA and the Business Appointment Rules; transparency around lobbying; and the regulation of public appointments. The Committee also called for new primary legislation to establish in statute the independence of standards regulators.

The previous government published its full response in July 2023.<sup>8</sup> We have tracked the previous government's response to each of the Committee's recommendations and our assessment of whether or not the recommendation has been met is available on our website.<sup>9</sup>

We welcome the new Ministerial Code with its clear commitment to the Principles of Public Life, and the fact that the Independent Adviser on Ministerial Standards may now initiate investigations. These are important steps in the right direction. However, it should not be the end of the story. We would encourage the new government to review our recommendations and we will maintain a close interest in progress on these reforms.

Regulating Election Finance, 2021

CSPL published Regulating Election Finance in July 2021. The scope of the review was the system for regulating donations and election campaign expenditure. We made recommendations to reduce the risk of foreign money being donated to parties, improve the enforcement of electoral law and increase voter access to information about how money is spent at elections. We took evidence from a wide range of contributors, including the Electoral Commission, government, political parties, non-party campaigners, law enforcement bodies, returning officers and academics.

The Chair of the Committee wrote to Angela Rayner MP, Deputy Prime Minister and Secretary of State for Housing, Communities and Local Government in January this year to draw the government's attention to our 2021 report.<sup>10</sup> Rushanara Ali MP, Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Homelessness and Democracy replied in February.<sup>11</sup> This correspondence is available on our website.

The Minister's letter said that the government recognises the risk posed by actors who seek to interfere with and undermine our democratic processes, which is why the Labour Party manifesto committed to strengthen the rules around donations to political parties. The government would also be considering whether any changes to the way political finance rules are enforced are required to ensure enforcement provides a clear deterrent against breaking the law whilst remaining proportionate. The letter said the government is developing policy proposals to give effect to these commitments and in doing so it is considering the evidence provided by a range of stakeholders, including recommendations from CSPL. The Minister's letter confirmed that the government will introduce legislative measures in due course.

AI and Public Standards, 2020

In 2020, CSPL published its report, Artificial Intelligence and Public Standards, looking at whether the then regulatory and governance framework for AI was sufficient to ensure that public standards would continue to be upheld as AI is adopted more widely across the public sector.<sup>12</sup> The government published their response to our report in May 2021, which was broadly positive although not all recommendations were accepted.<sup>13</sup>

In light of developments in the intervening period, we reviewed progress made against our recommendations in July 2023. The then Chair wrote to the then Minister for AI and Intellectual Property, regulators, and public bodies asking for an update on progress; and we published a short follow up report summarising what they told us they had done in response to our recommendations in March 2024.<sup>14</sup> We also separately published the responses we received from the government, regulators and public bodies.<sup>15 16 17</sup>

In March 2024 we held an AI seminar to hear from experts in the field on the issues raised in 2020, in particular, the assurances required to enable public office holders to be comfortably accountable for advice and decisions derived from, or made by, AI. The summary note of the seminar is available on our website.<sup>18</sup> We also heard from academics from Cambridge University and the University of East Anglia on 20 March 2025. We are grateful to all those who give so freely of their time to inform the Committee and we continue to watch developments in this area with interest.

Local Government Ethical Standards, 2019

The Committee has a long standing interest in local government standards which it first explored in its third report, published in 1997, Standards of Conduct of Local Government in England, Scotland and Wales, and most recently in its 2019 report Local Government Ethical Standards. This report, which made 26 recommendations and identified a further 15 best practice recommendations, was warmly welcomed by the sector.<sup>1920</sup>

The Committee was pleased that the government's December 2024 consultation on strengthening the standards and conduct framework for local authorities in England was informed by our 2019 report and explored some of the recommendations presented in that report. Our Chair attended the Ministry of Housing, Communities and Local Government roundtable held on 12 February 2025 with key stakeholders as part of the consultation.

On 20 February 2025, the Committee held a seminar with a range of local government experts and practitioners, to inform CSPL's submission to the government consultation. We are grateful to all who participated in the seminar. A note of the session was published on our website, together with the Committee's submission to the consultation.<sup>21 22</sup>

ANNEXES

ANNEX A: ABOUT THE COMMITTEE

Governance

Our governance statements are published on our website.<sup>33</sup>

They include the following:

- Code of practice for members;
- Expectations of Committee members and the secretariat;
- Ground rules on public statements;
- Registers of members' Interests;
- Way of working;
- Register of stakeholder meetings.

Membership of the Committee

The Committee comprises the independent Chair, four independent members and four political members. Our political members are currently represented by the Labour, Conservative (vacancy) and Liberal Democrat parties and the Scottish National Party<sup>34</sup>. This mix of independent and political membership has served the Committee well, allowing the Committee to maintain a considered and impartial view whilst also understanding political perspectives.

Independent members are appointed for a five-year, non-renewable term through open competition run by the Cabinet Office.

Political members are appointed for a three-year term which can be renewed. Party members are nominated by their party leader.

The Chair and all members, independent and political, are appointed by the Prime Minister.

The workload of Committee members is high. Independent members are asked to co-lead reviews, attend evidence gathering meetings and hearings, and to consider drafts of consultations and reports.

Our membership is listed on the next page.

<sup>33</sup><https://www.gov.uk/government/organisations/the-committee-on-standards-in-public-life/about/our-governance>

<sup>34</sup> The political appointees to the Committee are drawn from the three largest parties in Parliament at the time a vacancy occurs. Following the 2024 General Election, the Liberal Democrats became the third largest party, overtaking the Scottish National Party, and accordingly a Liberal Democrat party member was appointed. However, the existing members remain until that member's term concludes.

Research Advisory Board

In order to assist the Committee and the researchers, a Research Advisory Board was appointed in 2001 and was involved in all of the key milestones of the research programme, which led to the publication of the results of the first public survey in September 2004.<sup>35</sup>

In 2005, the Committee decided to maintain an Advisory Board for the repeat survey and review of the Seven Principles, albeit with a smaller membership and placed on a more formal footing, with members paid a daily rate and expenses.

The Board is no longer a formal body, but its former Chair, Professor Mark Philp, Emeritus Professor, University of Warwick, attends Committee meetings to advise the Committee and calls in academics to advise on particular subjects as necessary.

Personal Information Charter

Our privacy notice, which explains how the Committee on Standards in Public Life uses the personal information of members of the public, can be found on our website.<sup>36</sup>

<sup>35</sup> From 2004 - 2013, the Committee conducted 2-yearly surveys to keep us in touch with current attitudes, in order to analyse the standards of behaviour the British public feel public office holders should be kept to, the extent to which these standards are believed to be upheld, and the perception of how well the systems put in place to enforce them are operating. Following the recommendations in the Triennial Review, the latest public attitude survey published on 23 September 2013 was the final one published by the Committee. The Committee now conducts smaller pieces of research where appropriate to support its work.
