Important information

Before answering question e55 on the DBS application form, follow these simple steps:

Do you need to answer ‘yes’ to question e55?

If you have criminal convictions, read the criminal conviction filtering guidance before answering question e55, here:

www.gov.uk/government/collections/dbs-filtering-guidance

Make sure you understand what question e55 is asking, and that you’re sure of how to answer the question

Be sure you’re not sharing information about your criminal information that you are not required to

Check the list of offences that will be filtered, so you’re informed about whether to disclose your criminal information

Why is it important to read this guidance?

On 29 May 2013, legislation came into force that allows certain old and minor convictions to no longer be subject to disclosure - you need to understand how this affects you and whether you need to disclose your criminal information.

Certain old and minor convictions will be filtered out, and no longer disclosed on a certificate.

All cautions and convictions for specified serious violent and sexual offences, and other specified offences concerned with safeguarding children and vulnerable adults, will remain subject to disclosure.

To be sure of how this affects you, make sure you read the DBS filtering guidance before answering question e55 on the application form.
