Hi,

I strongly object to the preposterous plan to house over a 1000 men in such a remote area, near small villages with less than half that number of residents

These men will be in the middle of nowhere with nothing to do except get bored and frustrated and start to roam around the local area.
How are these men supposed to get to shops? There's no realistic transport links

The doctors in Bicester are already under pressure as I have personally experienced. How are these men in their hundreds going to get an appointment and get to the surgeries! Even if an appointment is available

Lastly and most importantly the safety and security of the local residents and the men is questionable due to the remoteness of the site

I beg you, use common sense and don't put a huge number of men out in such a rural area with no facilities or security

Thank you
Louise
